UNITED NATIONS ACTIONS AGAINST DISCRIMINATION

THE UNITED NATIONS SYSTEM STANDARD- SETTING INSTRUMENTS AND PROGRAMMES AGAINST DISCRIMINATION : INTRODUCTORY REMARKS

Janusz SYMONIDES*

The struggle for the elimination of all forms of discrimination conducted by the United Nations system from the moment of its creation is a very important element in the efforts of the international community to assure full implementation and observance of human rights.

Discrimination, violation of rights of persons belonging to vulnerable groups, the minorities, indigenous people, immigrant workers or aliens should also be seen as the cause for serious conflicts and danger for international peace and stability. As the preamble of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights states so convincingly:

« ... recognition of the inherent dignity and of equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world ».

The United Nations has been successful in the elimination of such institutional forms of discrimination as colonialism and apartheid. Nevertheless the struggle against all forms of discrimination is still far from being won. In a situation where the international community is witnessing a mounting wave of racism, xenophobia and anti-semitism, the need to increase by all possible means the efforts of the United Nations system to combat all forms of discrimination is more than evident.

* Director, Division of Human Rights, Democracy and Peace, UNESCO.

The nature and definition of discrimination

All human beings, as stipulated by Article 7 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights:

« ... are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law ».

Discrimination considered as any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference aimed at the denial or refusal of equal rights and protection is the very negation of the principle of equality and an affront to human dignity.

The Charter of the United Nations in Articles 1, 55 and 75, speaks three times about 'respect for human rights and for fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language, or religion'. Article 2 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights obliges States Parties to respect and to ensure to all individuals the rights « ... without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status »¹.

Neither the Universal Declaration of Human Rights nor the International Covenants define 'discrimination'. A definition of this term can only be found in conventions and declarations dealing with specific types or forms of discrimination².

Article 1 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination defines the term 'racial discrimination' as any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on race, colour, descent, or national or ethnic origin which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise, on an equal footing, of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in the political, economic, social, cultural or any other field of public life.

For the purpose of the ILO Convention (N° 111) concerning Discrimination in respect of Employment and Occupation, the term 'discrimination' includes any distinction, exclusion or preference made on the basis of race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin, which has the effect of nullifying or impairing equality of opportunity or treatment in employment or occupation.

During its thirty-seventh session in 1989, the Human Rights Committee in its general comment gave the following definition of the discrimination:

« ... any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference which is based on any ground such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, and which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by all persons on an equal footing, of all rights and freedoms »³.

The achievement of equality not only de jure but also de facto demands sometimes that an affirmative action be taken by States to diminish or eliminate conditions which cause discrimination of individuals or groups of the population. Such actions may involve a preferential treatment. In this respect, Article 1 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination provides that any special measures taken for the sole purpose of securing adequate advancement of certain racial or ethnic groups or individuals requesting such protection as may be necessary in order to ensure their equal enjoyment or exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms shall not be deemed racial discrimination if such measures do not lead to the maintenance of separate rights for different racial groups and are not continued after the achievement of their objectives. Similarly Article 4 of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women states that the adoption by States Parties of temporary special measures aimed at accelerating de facto equality between men and women shall not be considered as discriminatory.

The enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms on an equal footing does not mean identical treatment in every instance. Human rights instruments allow in some cases differentiation in the enjoyment of political rights on the grounds of age or citizenship⁴. The UNESCO Convention Against Discrimination in Education in Article 2 specifies three situations which lead to differentiation in access to educational institutions⁵ and which, under certain conditions, shall not be deemed to constitute discrimination.

The struggle against racism and racial discrimination

Measures undertaken by the United Nations system to combat racism and racial discrimination

Already on 19 November 1946, the General Assembly, during its first session, adopted resolution 103/I in which it declared:

« ... that it is in the higher interests of humanity to put an immediate end to religious and so-called social persecution and discrimination ».

Since the adoption of this resolution, the United Nations bodies have considered the question of racial discrimination mainly in the context of the struggle against apartheid and non-self-governing and trust territories. In 1959-1960, the outbreak of manifestations of racial prejudice and religious intolerance which were reminiscent of the crimes and outrages committed by the Nazis prior to and during the Second World War in several European countries led to a series of resolutions of the General Assembly whereby it condemned manifestations and practices of racial, religious and national hatred and called upon the governments of all States to take all necessary measures to prevent all these manifestations.

On 20 November 1963 the General Assembly adopted the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and, two years later, on 21 December 1965, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. These instruments are presented in length in the article by Rüdiger Wolfrum 'The implementation of international standards as prevention and elimination of racial discrimination : achievements and challenges', which follows this introduction.

The International Conference on Human Rights held in Tehran in 1968 considered various aspects of the problem of racial discrimination and declared in the Proclamation of Tehran:

« The peoples of the world must be made fully aware of the evils of racial discrimination and must join in combating them [...] All ideologies based on racial superiority and intolerance must be condemned and resisted ».

The multidimensional activities of the United Nations against racial discrimination have been intensified within the framework of three Decades for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination. The first covered the period 1973-1982 and the second 1983-1992. Speaking about the goals of the first Decade in its resolution 3051(XXVIII) of 2 November 1973, the General Assembly stressed that it should help:

« ... to promote human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction of any kind on grounds of race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin, especially by eradicating racial prejudice, racism and racial discrimination; to arrest any expression of racist policies and to eliminate the persistence of racist policies and to counteract the emergence of alliances based on mutual espousal of racism and racial discrimination ».

These goals are still valid for the Third Decade to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination proclaimed by the General Assembly on 20 December 1993 for the period 1993-2003. The Plan of Action for the Third Decade foresees activities against racism and racial discrimination at the international, regional and national level, basic research and studies, co-ordination and reporting and regulate system-wide consultations.

The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action adopted at the World Conference on Human Rights on 25 June 1993 considered the elimination of racism and racial discrimination, in particular in their institutionalized forms such as apartheid or resulting from doctrines of racial superiority or excess or contemporary forms and manifestations of racism, as a primary objective for the international community. It also called upon the United Nations organs and agencies to strengthen their efforts to implement the programme of action relating to the Decade. The World Conference also appealed to the international community to contribute generously to the Trust Fund for the Decade.

The Commission on Human Rights appointed in 1993 a Special Rapporteur to study both institutional and indirect forms of racism and racial discrimination against national, ethnic, linguistic and religious minorities and migrant workers throughout the world⁶.

In resolution 1996/21 on measures to combat contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance⁷, the Commission on Human Rights expressed its deep concern that, despite efforts, racism, racial discrimination, anti-semitism, xenophobia and related intolerance, as well as acts of racist violence, continue to persist and even grow in magnitude, incessantly adopting new forms, including new tendencies to establish policies based on racial, religious, ethnic, cultural and national superiority or exclusivity. It expressed its unequivocal condemnation of all forms of racism and racial discrimination and all racist violence⁸. The Commission took note of the reports submitted by the Special Rapporteur and it called upon all governments, intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations, to supply information to the Special

Rapporteur⁹ who was also encouraged to present further recommendations concerning human rights education and actions against racism and racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance.

UNESCO Statements and the Declaration on Race and Racial Prejudice

The UNESCO stand against racism has already been determined by its Constitution which declares:

« ... the great and terrible war which has now ended was a war made possible by the denial of the democratic principles [...] by the propagation, in their place through ignorance and prejudice, of the doctrine of the inequality of men and races ».

In 1948, the United Nations Economic and Social Council urged UNESCO to adopt a programme concerning discriminatory scientific facts designed to remove racial prejudice. In response to this appeal, the Organization undertook a number of studies which brought to light the completely unscientific foundations of racism.

UNESCO convened several meetings of specialists to consider various manifestations and aspects of racism. In 1950, a group of eminent experts prepared a Statement on Race, followed in 1951 by a Statement on the Nature of Race and Race Differences. Both statements emphasized that biological differentiation of races is without foundation, and unequivocally rejected theories of racial superiority. Race is not a biological phenomenon but a social myth. Therefore it would be better, when speaking of humankind, to drop the term 'race' and to speak of ethnic groups. In 1964, Proposals on Biological Aspects of Race were elaborated. This text emphasized the predominance of historical, social and cultural factors over biological factors in the explanation of physical differences between populations living in different geographical areas of the world. The fourth Statement on Race and Racial Prejudice was worked out in 1967 and contained the elucidation of the racist theories and racial prejudice.

In 1972, the UNESCO General Conference called for the preparation of a Declaration which would take into account the findings of the Statements and present a set of universally applicable principles which could be recommended to Member States. Consequently, the General Conference, at its twentieth session (1978), solemnly adopted, by acclamation, the Declaration on Race and Racial Prejudice which states that all human beings belong to a single species and are descended from a common stock; that they are born equal in dignity and rights and all form an integral part of humanity. Racial prejudice, historically linked with inequalities in power and reinforced by economic and social differences between individuals and groups, is qualified by this instrument as being totally without justification.

The Declaration proclaims that diversity of life styles and the right to be different may not in any circumstances serve as a pretext for racial prejudice. The State has prime responsibility for ensuring human rights and fundamental freedoms and it should take all appropriate steps to prevent, prohibit and eradicate racism, racist propaganda, racial segregation and apartheid.

Since the adoption of the Declaration, the Director-General has submitted five reports on its implementation to the General Conference at its 1980, 1983, 1987, 1991 and 1995 sessions. These reports are based on information provided by Member States.

The Declaration on the Role of Mass Media in the Struggle against Racial Discrimination and Apartheid

In the efforts aimed at the consolidation of peace, in the elimination of all forms of discrimination, in the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in the shaping of behavioural patterns, the mass media, radio, television, newspapers may and should play an important role. This idea led to the adoption in 1978 by the General Conference of the UNESCO Declaration on Fundamental Principles Concerning the Contribution of the Mass Media to Strengthening Peace and International Understanding, to the Promotion of Human Rights and to Countering Racism, Apartheid and Incitement to War.

Work on the Declaration started in 1970 and was continued in an atmosphere of controversy concerning, in particular, the problem of governmental control of the media. After a number of drafts and projects elaborated by intergovernmental meetings of experts and the UNESCO Secretariat, it became possible to arrive at a text which, seen by some as '... the least objectionable of a series of bad alternatives' or as '... an honorary compromise' by others, was in the end unanimously adopted.

The Declaration in its preamble recalls the provisions of international conventions¹⁰ which oblige States Parties to adopt immediate and positive measures assigned to eradicate all incitement to, or acts of, racial discrimination, and agree to prevent any encouragement of the crime of apartheid and similar segregational policies or their manifestations.

Article I states that the strengthening of peace, and international understanding, the promotion of human rights and the countering of racialism, apartheid and incitement to war demand a free flow and a wider and better balanced dissemination of information. As formulated in Article III, the mass media, by disseminating information on the aims, aspirations, cultures and needs of all peoples, contribute to eliminating ignorance and misunderstanding between peoples, to make nationals of a country sensitive to the needs and desires of others, to ensure the respect of the rights and dignity of all nations, all peoples and all individuals.

The Declaration does not call for State control of the media and does not speak about governmental responsibilities. It stresses that it is indispensable, with due respect for constitutional provisions and for the applicable international instruments, to create and maintain throughout the world the conditions which make it possible for the organizations and persons professionally involved in the dissemination of information to achieve the objectives of this Declaration. Therefore it should be rather seen as a help in the application of a code of ethics by professional organizations, educators, journalists and other agents of the mass media and those who assist them in performing their functions.

UNESCO actions against apartheid

The position taken by UNESCO on racial problems has been unequivocal and brought about the decision of the Government of the Union of South Africa to withdraw from the Organisation on 31 December 1956. In 1966, the General Conference requested the Director-General not to invite the Republic of South Africa to attend conferences or take part in other UNESCO activities, until such time as the South African Government abandoned its policy of racial discrimination. Then, in 1967, UNESCO published Apartheid and Its Effects on Education, Science, Culture and Information, a second, updated edition of which appeared in 1972¹¹.

In 1970, the sixteenth session of the General Conference called for positive action to support the African liberation movements and, to that end, invited the Director-General:

« ... to send a mission to the Organization of African Unity and, after examination of its report by the Executive Board, evolve concrete programmes for assistance to (a) refugees from colonial territories and (b) other people striving to liberate themselves from colonial domination and all forms of apartheid ».

Subsequently programmes of assistance for the liberation movements of Namibia and South Africa were launched. Assistance to them was primarily rendered in the field of education and comprised fellowships and school stipends. It was extended in 1975 to the African National Congress (ANC), the Pan-Africanist Congress of Azania (PAC) and the South West Africa People's Organisation (SWAPO).

In addition to studies on the theoretical and ideological basis of apartheid, training programmes for South African and ¹¹ In co-operation with the Organisation of African Unity (OAU), UNESCO published: Race, Class and the Apartheid State by Harold Wolpe; Endgame in South Africa? by Robin Cohen; and A History of Resistance in Namibia by Peter Katjavivi. In addition, a strip cartoon Fighting Apartheid : A Cartoon History was prepared in co-operation with the International Defence and Aid Fund for Southern Africa in London.

Namibian key personnel, especially to upgrade their knowledge in social sciences, were organized. Furthermore, UNESCO created working groups on women and apartheid, economics and apartheid, and culture and apartheid.

In the framework of the Special Project : Contribution to the Elimination of Apartheid : Towards an Apartheid-Free World, UNESCO continued promoting actions of solidarity against apartheid and improving training programmes. Several meetings, devoted to the study of various political alternatives for an apartheid-free society, including problems of promoting a culture of peace and democracy in South Africa were organized.

Since the abolishment of the system of apartheid, UNESCO has started activities in order to assist the construction of a democratic, non-racial, apartheid-free society in South Africa. As part of these efforts aimed at promoting education for human rights, democracy, peace and tolerance. UNESCO Chairs have been established at universities in Fort Hare and Durban.

Elimination of intolerance and discrimination based on religion and belief

The Charter of the United Nations in its Article 1 prohibits distinction on the basis of religion. The right of everyone to freedom of thought, conscience and religion is formulated by Article 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights which adds that it:

« ... includes freedom to change his religion or belief, and freedom either, alone or in community with others and in public or private, to manifest his religion or belief in teaching, practice, worship and observance ».

This right is further elaborated by Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights which stipulates that no one shall be subject to coercion which would impair his freedom to have or to adopt a religion or belief of his choice and provides that freedom to manifest one's religion or beliefs may be subject only to such limitations as are prevented by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health, or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others.

Discrimination in the matter of religious rights and practices was discussed by the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in 1956 which instituted a study on this subject. Its final version was presented by the Special Rapporteur in 1960. The Sub-Commission and the Commission on Human Rights, as requested by the General Assembly, prepared a draft convention and a draft declaration on the elimination of all forms of religious intolerance¹². In 1981, the Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief was adopted¹³.

The Preamble of the Declaration speaks about intolerance and discrimination in matters of religion and belief, and the need for their speedy elimination. Article 2, reaffirming the right of everyone to freedom of thought, conscience and religion¹⁴, defines 'intolerance and discrimination based on religion or belief' as:

« ... any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on religion or belief and having as its purpose or as its effect nullification or impairment of the recognition, enjoyment or exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms on an equal basis ».

The Declaration requests from States effective measures to prevent discrimination on the grounds of religion and belief, and all efforts to enact or rescind relevant legislation and, where necessary, to prohibit any such discrimination and intolerance.

It also gives an important clarification concerning the content of the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief providing that it shall include, inter alia, nine freedoms¹⁵.

¹² The General Assembly decided (resolution 3027(XXVII) of 7 December 1962) to give priority to a draft declaration.

¹³ General Assembly resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981.

¹⁴ The formulation in Article 18 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights was repeated.

¹⁵ Article 6 enumerates the following freedoms: (a) To worship or assemble in connection with a religion or belief; ... (b) To establish and maintain appropriate charitable or humanitarian institutions; (c) To make, acquire and use to an adequate extent the necessary articles and materials ...; (d) To write, issue and disseminate relevant publications ...; (e) To teach a religion or belief ...; (f) to solicit and receive

The implementation of the Declaration is included on the agenda of all subsequent sessions of the Commission on Human Rights which receives reports on this subject prepared by the Special Rapporteur. At its 1996 session, the Commission noted with grave concern the continuing instances of hatred and intolerance including acts of violence based upon religious intolerance in all its forms¹⁶. It urged States to ensure that their constitutional and legal systems provide adequate and effective guarantees of freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief to all without discrimination, including the provision of effective remedies in cases where the right to freedom of religion or belief is violated. The recommendations also expressed grave concern at attacks upon religious places, sites and shrines and called upon States to exert their utmost efforts to ensure that they be fully respected and protected.

The Commission encouraged the Special Rapporteur to continue the examination of incidents and governmental actions in all parts of the world which are incompatible with the provisions of the Declaration and to recommend remedial measures.

The World Conference on Human Rights called upon all Governments to take all appropriate measures in compliance with their international obligations and with due regard to their respective legal systems to counter intolerance and related violence based on religion or belief, including the desecration of religious sites¹⁷.

United Nations declarations and conventions against discrimination of persons belonging to vulnerable groups

Equality and non-discrimination of women

The United Nations is fully committed to the equality between men and women. In the Preamble of the Charter, the peoples of the United Nations proclaim their determination:

« ... to reaffirm faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person, in the equal rights of men and women ».

Articles 13, 55 and 75 call for the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to sex. The principle of equality of men and women and the prohibition of discrimination against women is proclaimed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights.

In 1946, the Economic and Social Council established the Commission on the Status of Women to prepare recommendations and reports on promoting women's rights and recommendations on the implementation of the principle that men and women shall have equal rights.

Though all United Nations instruments dealing with the specific rights of women¹⁸ promote the principle of equality and non-discrimination, four of them reproduced in this publication deserve special attention: The Convention on the Political Rights of Women; the Declaration and Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women; and the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence Against Women.

Among important instruments adopted by ILO in this field¹⁹ is the Convention (N° 200) concerning Equal Remuneration for ¹⁸ The list of conventions comprises the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women (1957); the Convention on Consent to Marriage, Minimum Age for Marriage and Registration of Marriages (1962); the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic of Persons and the Exploitation or the Prostitution of Others (1949); the Supplementary Convention on the Abolition of Slavery, the Slave Trade, and Institutions and Practices Similar to Slavery (1956).

¹⁹ Along earlier conventions, one can list the Convention (N° 45) on the Underground Work of Women (1935); the Convention (N° 89) on the Men and Women Workers for Work of Equal Value (1951) which, in its Article 2, impose the obligation on Member States to:

« ... ensure the application to all workers of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value ».

The Convention on the Political Rights of Women

In 1945, when the United Nations was founded, women were only able to vote on equal terms with men in thirty of the fifty-one original Member States²⁰. In this situation the General Assembly, during its first session in 1946, adopted resolution 51(I) which recommended that all Member States which had not done so should adopt the necessary measures to fulfil the purposes and aims of the Charter of the United Nations by granting to women the same political rights as to men.

The equality of political rights between men and women was then reinforced in 1948 by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights which in its Article 21 stated:

- « 1. Everyone has the right to take part in the government of his country, directly or through freely chosen representatives.
2. Everyone has the right to equal access to public service in his country ... ».

In 1952 the General Assembly, as recommended by the Commission on the Status of Women, adopted the Convention on the Political Rights of Women²¹. The main objective of the Convention is to implement the principle of equality of rights for men and women in the enjoyment and exercise of political rights, in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Night Work of Women (1948); as well as the Recommendation (N° 123) on the Employment of Women with Family Responsibilities (1965).

²¹ The Convention was opened for signature and ratification by General Assembly resolution 640(VII) of 20 December 1952.

The Convention formulates important principles providing that women, without any discrimination, shall be (a) entitled to vote in all elections; (b) eligible for elections to all publicly elected bodies established by national law; (c) entitled to hold public office and exercise all public functions established by national law.

Though the Convention is limited in its scope as it deals only with discrimination of women as far as the implementation of their political rights is concerned, nevertheless it is the first universal binding instrument creating legal obligations for States Parties. It opened the way for the adoption by the United Nations of a series of instruments aimed at the elimination of discrimination against women in all areas of public and private life.

As foreseen by its Article VI, the Convention entered into force after the deposit of the sixth instrument of ratification on 7 July 1954. By 1996 the Convention was binding for 108 Member States. This means that there is still a need for future action to ensure its full universality²².

Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women

An important step in the struggle against all forms of discrimination against women was made in 1967 when the General Assembly adopted unanimously the above Declaration²³. It provides in Article 1 that discrimination against women is fundamentally unjust and constitutes an offence against human dignity, and calls, on the one hand, for the abolishment of existing laws, customs, regulations and practices which are discriminatory against women and for the establishment, on the other hand, of adequate protection for equal rights of women by the embodying of the principle of equality in constitutions and in law. Recognizing the importance of ratification or accession to international instruments adopted by the United Nations system, it stresses the need to educate public opinion and to direct national aspirations towards the eradication of prejudice and the abolition of practices based on the supposed inferiority of women. Thus the Declaration may be recognized as a first attempt in the codification of human rights standards referring to the elimination of discrimination against women²⁴.

²² It should be noted that the Convention has not been ratified or acceded to by the majority of Arab States.

²³ General Assembly resolution 2263(XXII) was adopted on 7 November 1967 after four years of debate.

The importance of the Declaration is linked with the fact that it presented in a comprehensive manner various women's rights already formulated by a number of United Nations instruments. It deals with political rights, the right to nationality, civil rights, as well as economic, social and educational rights. It demands the abolition of discriminatory provisions in penal codes and the adoption of appropriate measures to combat all forms of traffic in women and exploitation of prostitution.

The Declaration calls upon governments, non-governmental organizations and individuals to do all in their power to promote the implementation of its principles. Since 1968, governments, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations concerned were requested by the Economic and Social Council to inform the Secretary-General of publicity given to the Declaration and of actions taken in compliance with its principles. These reports were then integrated into the reporting system foreseen for the implementation of the objectives of International Women's Year (1975).

Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women.

No doubt a milestone in United Nations action aimed at the promotion of equality between men and women is the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women, adopted by the General Assembly in 1979²⁵. The Convention, the most comprehensive binding instrument (containing 30 articles), not only confirms standards already formulated by earlier conventions and declarations and sums up the normative work done by the United Nations system but adds new important dimensions and principles. It therefore brings about a progressive development of human rights prohibiting discrimination against women.

²⁴ The Declaration takes into account the basic principles of the Convention on the Political Rights of Women (1952), the Convention on the Nationality of Married Women (1957), the Convention on the Consent to Marriage, Minimum Age for Marriage and Registration of Marriages (1962), the Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Women (1949); the UNESCO Convention Against Discrimination in Education (1960) as well as the ILO Equal Remuneration Convention (1951) and Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention (1958).

²⁵ Adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession by General Assembly resolution 34/180 of 18 December 1979, the Convention entered into force on 3 September 1981, as foreseen by its

The work on the preparation of this instrument was started in 1974 when the Commission on the Status of Women set up a Working Group to assist it in this task. A draft of a convention was approved in 1977 by the Third Commission of the General Assembly and finally adopted by the General Assembly two years later.

Article 1 of the Convention defines the term 'discrimination against women' as being:

« ... any distinction, exclusion or restriction made on the basis of sex which has the effect or purpose of impairing or nullifying the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by women, irrespective of their marital status, on a basis of equality of men and women, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural, civil or any other field ».

States Parties to the Convention agree to pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating discrimination against women and undertake, in particular, the following obligations:

- « (a) to embody the principle of equality of men and women in their national constitutions or other appropriate legislation;
- (b) to adopt appropriate legislative and other measures, including sanctions, prohibiting all discrimination against women;
- (c) to establish legal protection of the rights of women;

Article 22, on the thirtieth day after the date of deposit of the twentieth instrument of ratification or accession. See, Human Rights, Discrimination Against Women: The Convention and the Committee, Fact Sheet N° 22, United Nations, Geneva, 1994.

- (d) to refrain from engaging in any act or practice of discrimination against women and ensure that public authorities and institutions shall act in conformity with this obligation;
- (e) to take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women by any person, organization or enterprise;
- (f) to take all appropriate measures to modify or abolish existing laws, regulations, customs and practices which constitute discrimination against women;
- (g) to repeal all national penal provisions which constitute discrimination against women ».

As already mentioned, the Convention foresees the possibility of affirmative action by explaining that the adoption by States Parties of temporary special measures aimed at accelerating de facto equality between men and women shall not be considered discriminatory. These measures should be discontinued when objectives of equality of opportunity and treatment have been achieved.

The Convention formulates in detail measures to eliminate discrimination against women in political and public life, in the field of education, employment, health care and other areas of economic and social life, as well as in matters relating to marriage and family relations.

By 1996 the Convention was binding for 153 States Parties. In order to consider the progress made in the implementation of the Convention, a Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women comprising twenty-three experts was elected as foreseen in Article 17. The Committee considers reports submitted by States Parties on the legislative, practical, administrative or other measures which they have adopted to give effect to the provisions of the Convention²⁶. It reports annually to the General Assembly through the Economic and Social Council. The Committee may make suggestions and general recommendations based on its examination of reports and information received from States Parties. Since 1986, the Committee has formulated twenty-two general recommendations²⁷ dealing, inter alia, with reporting by States Parties on temporary special measures, violence against women, equal remuneration, female circumcision, equality in marriage and family relations.

Declaration on the Elimination of Violence Against Women

In its General Recommendation N° 12 of 1989, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women recommended States Parties to the Convention to include in their periodic reports information about the legislation in force to protect women against the incidents of all kinds of violence in everyday life (including sexual violence, abuse in the family, sexual harassment at work, etc.); about measures adopted to eradicate this violence and the existence of support services for women who are victims of aggression or abuse.

The Economic and Social Council, in May 1991, addressed comprehensively the issue of violence against women in all its forms. The Council recommended that a framework for an international instrument addressing this issue be developed in consultation with the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women²⁸.

The World Conference on Human Rights stressed the importance of working towards the elimination of violence against women in public and private life and the elimination of all forms of sexual harassment. It called upon the General Assembly to adopt a draft declaration on violence against women and urged States to combat violence against women²⁹.

The Declaration on the Elimination of Violence Against Women was proclaimed by General Assembly resolution 48/104 on 20 December 1993. The Declaration underlines that violence against women is an obstacle to the achievement of equality, development and peace, that it constitutes a violation of the rights and fundamental freedoms of women and is a manifestation of the historically unequal power relations between men and women, which have led to domination over and discrimination against women.

Article 1 defines the term 'violence against women' as:

« ... any act of gender-based violence that results in, or is likely to result in, physical, sexual or psychological harm or suffering to women, including threats of such acts, coercion or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, whether occurring in public or in private life ».

The Declaration calls upon States to pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating violence against women³⁰.

In March 1994, the Commission on Human Rights decided to appoint a special rapporteur on violence against women, its causes and consequences³¹. In 1996, the Commission took note of the report presented and condemned all acts of gender-based violence against women³².

The United Nations Plans of Action and Strategies for the Promotion of Equality and Non-Discrimination of Women

In order to raise public awareness on questions linked with equality between men and women and to encourage and reinforce concrete steps and actions aimed at the elimination of discrimination against women, the United Nations undertook various initiatives and adopted a series of plans to this effect.

³⁰ Article 4 of the Declaration foresees seventeen concrete actions to be undertaken by States from ratifying or acceding to the Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women (where they have not yet done so), through refraining from engaging in violence against women, punishment of acts of violence against women, development of preventive approaches, sensitizing law enforcement officers and public officials, to the encouragement of intergovernmental regional organizations to include the elimination of violence against women in their programmes.

³¹ Resolution 1994/45.

³² Resolution 1996/49.

In 1972, the General Assembly proclaimed 1975 as International Women's Year, declaring that the first of its objectives is '... to promote equality between men and women'. The World Conference of the International Women's Year which gathered in 1975 in Mexico adopted the Declaration of Mexico on the Equality of Women and Their Contribution to Development and Peace as well as the World Plan of Action for the Implementation of the Objectives of the International Women's Year. The Plan recommended that governments ensure both women and men equality before the law, equality of educational and training opportunities and equality in employment opportunities. It stressed that the under-development of socio-economic structures in most areas of the world is the major cause of women's inferior position. The Economic and Social Council, in order to supplement the resources available for the implementation of the programme of the International Women's Year, established a voluntary fund in 1974.

In line with the proposals formulated by the Mexico Conference, the General Assembly proclaimed the period 1976-1985 the United Nations Decade for Women : Equality, Development and Peace. The mid-term World Conference of this Decade held in Copenhagen in 1980 adopted a Programme of Action designed to promote the three objectives of the Decade.

The United Nations Decade for Women concluded with the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women which was held in Nairobi in 1985. It adopted the Nairobi Forward-Looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women based on the assumption that an essential contribution to the strengthening of international peace and security would be made by the elimination of all forms of inequality between men and women . Governments were requested to allocate resources and to establish or reinforce mechanisms to promote full integration of women in all aspects of public and civil life in their countries. The Strategies were endorsed by the General Assembly which entrusted its implementation to the Commission on the Status of Women. The Economic and Social Council established a reporting procedure within the United Nations to monitor and appraise the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-Looking Strategies.

The Commission on the Status of Women in the review and appraisal of the Nairobi Forward-Looking Strategies in relation to the de jure and de facto inequality between men and women recommended that countries should make efforts to make women more aware of their rights, and that negative stereotypes of women should be eliminated from textbooks and education. The Commission set an objective that, by the year 2000, women should achieve equal representation in political decision-making and that gender-related differences in adult literacy should be eliminated. It also underlined the need to pay greater attention to violence against women.

The Fourth World Conference on Women took place in Beijing, China, from 4 to 15 September 1995. Its main theme was 'Action for Equality, Development and Peace'. In the Beijing Declaration adopted on 15 September 1995³³, governments stressed their determination to advance the goals of equality, development and peace for all women everywhere in the interests of all humanity. Recognizing that the status of women has advanced in some important respects in the past decade but that progress has been uneven, inequalities between men and women have persisted and major obstacles remain, with serious consequences for the well-being of all people.

The Conference adopted, together with the Declaration, the Platform for Action which is an agenda for women's empowerment. It aims at accelerating the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-Looking Strategies and at removing all the obstacles to women's active participation in all spheres of life through a full and equal share in economic, social, cultural and political decision-making. The Platform upholds the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women and declares that its implementation, including through national laws and the formulation of strategies, policies, programmes and development priorities, is the sovereign responsibility of each State, in conformity with all human rights and fundamental freedoms. It needs to be implemented on national, regional and international levels.

The Platform for Action should be implemented through the work of all the bodies and organizations of the United Nations system. In this context, it is worth noting that UNESCO, since its early years, has been very active in combating all forms of inequality based on gender and promoting equality between women and men in its fields of competence³⁴. The Organization participated actively in the Beijing Conference and has undertaken a programme aimed at the implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action.

Among strategic objectives specifically aimed at the elimination of discrimination against women the Platform calls, inter alia, for: access to education; equal development; measures to prevent and eliminate violence; elimination of trafficking in women; promotion of their economic rights; elimination of employment discrimination; access to and full participation in power structures and decision-making; integration of gender perspectives in legislation, public policies, programmes and projects, equality and non-discrimination under law and in practice; full implementation of all human rights instruments, especially the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women. The Platform pays special attention to the elimination of all forms of discrimination against the girl child.

Persons belonging to minorities

The protection of minorities, their equal and non-discriminatory treatment became a matter of international concern after the First World War.

Treaties between the victorious Allied and Associated Powers and the Eastern European and Balkan States provided for the protection of racial, religious or linguistic minorities in these States. The emphasis was on the right to life and liberty; the free exercise of religion without discrimination; equality before the law; the freedom to organize educational programmes and an obligation to ensure elementary instruction of children in their mother tongue. The League of Nations supervised these obligations and their violations were subject to action by the League. States themselves could bring allegations of violations of the treaty provisions to the Council of the League of Nations and, in many cases, claims were taken to the Permanent Court of International Justice. The right to present petitions was also given to individuals. The system was unequal however, as obligations were imposed only on newly independent States and fell victim to the decline of the League of Nations.

Neither the protection of minorities nor the rights of persons belonging to minorities were mentioned in the United Nations Charter. The United Nations Secretariat in 1947 took the view that the League of Nations minority system had ceased to exist in favour of a new universal and individualistic conception of human rights. Nevertheless, the protection of minorities was not completely forgotten as the Economic and Social Council authorized the Commission on Human Rights to make a recommendation on this subject.

The United Nations General Assembly in resolution 217C(III), whilst declaring that the United Nations cannot remain indifferent to the fate of minorities, added that:

«... it is difficult to adopt a uniform solution to this complex and delicate question, which has special aspects in each State in which it arises».

In a memorandum entitled Definition and Classification of Minorities submitted by the Secretary-General to the United Nations Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities in 1950, a classification based on eight criteria contained nearly thirty different groups.

On 10 December 1948, the General Assembly invited the Commission on Human Rights to make a thorough study of the problem of minorities in order that the United Nations might take effective measures for their protection. In accordance with this request, between 1948 and 1955, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities undertook a number of studies concerning the status and classification of minorities.

In 1977, the Special Rapporteur of the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities, prepared a study on the rights of persons belonging to ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities³⁵. The study analysed the concept of a minority; presented the international protection of persons belonging to ethnic, religious and linguistic minorities since 1919; their position in the society in which they live as well as the application of the principles set forth in Article 27 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

The Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities decided to prepare a report on national experiences regarding peaceful and constructive solutions of problems involving minorities³⁶. The Special Rapporteur presented the final report in 1993.

Though the protection of minorities was not recognized in normative instruments adopted by the United Nations system, the rights of persons belonging to minorities are mentioned by several of them. The first international convention adopted after 1945 which contains provisions expressis verbis relating to the rights of persons belonging to minorities is the UNESCO Convention against Discrimination in Education (1960). The States Parties to the Convention agreed in Article 5, point 1c:

«... it is essential to recognize the right of members of national minorities to carry on their own educational activities, including the maintenance of schools and, depending on the educational policy of each State, the use or the teaching of their own language ».

The International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights is of particular importance in this context as its Article 27 states:

« In those States in which ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities exist, persons belonging to such minorities should not be denied the right, in community with the other members of their group, to enjoy their own culture, to profess and practice their own religion, or to use their own language ».

This provision gives, if the conditions foreseen by the Optional Protocol by the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights are fulfilled, the possibility for individuals to present communications to the Human Rights Committee concerning the violation of their rights. The implementation of Article 27 is also verified through the reporting system.

Article 27, with small alterations, was incorporated in the Convention on the Rights of the Child (1989) which, in its Article 30, stipulates:

«In those States in which ethnic, religious or linguistic minorities or persons of indigenous origin exist, a child belonging to such a minority or who is indigenous shall not be denied the right, in community with other members of his or her group, to enjoy his or her own culture, to profess and practise his or her own religion, or to use his or her own language».

The implementation of this provision is subject to the verification procedure based on reports presented to the Committee on the Rights of the Child.

Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities

On 18 December 1992, the Declaration was adopted by the General Assembly³⁷. Thus the work which had been started by the Commission on Human Rights in 1978 by the establishment of a working group came to a successful conclusion. The Declaration formulates the obligation of States to protect the existence and identity of minorities within their respective territories.

Among rights of persons belonging to minorities it lists: the right to enjoy their own culture; to profess and practise their own religion; to use their own language; to participate effectively in cultural, religious, social, economic and public life, as well as in the decision-making process concerning the minority to which they belong; to establish and monitor their own associations; to establish and maintain without any discrimination, free and peaceful contacts with other members of their group or other citizens of other States to whom they are related by national or ethnic, religious or linguistic ties. To eliminate any misinterpretation, it provides expressis verbis that nothing in its text may be construed as permitting any activity contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations, including sovereign equality, territorial integrity and political independence of States.

The Declaration foresees a number of measures to be taken by States to ensure that persons belonging to national minorities may exercise fully and effectively all their human rights and fundamental freedoms without any discrimination and in full equality before the law; to enable them to express their characteristics and to develop their culture, language, religion, traditions and customs, except where specific practices are in violation of national law and contrary to international standards; to create for them adequate opportunities to learn their mother tongue. States should, where appropriate, take measures to encourage knowledge of the history, traditions, language and culture of the minorities existing within their territory which is important for assuring their non-discrimination and enable persons belonging to minorities to participate fully in economic progress and development in their country.

The Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, in its paragraph 19, stressed the importance of the promotion and protection of the rights of persons belonging to minorities and the contribution of such promotion and protection to the political and social stability of the States in which such persons live. The World Conference on Human Rights reaffirmed that States are obliged:

« ... to ensure that persons belonging to minorities may exercise fully and effectively all human rights and fundamental freedoms without any discrimination and in full equality before the law in accordance with the Declaration on the Rights of Persons Belonging to National or Ethnic, Religious and Linguistic Minorities ».

The Commission on Human Rights authorized the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to establish an inter-sessional working group to promote the rights of persons belonging to minorities. The Group held its first session in 1995. In 1996, the Commission affirmed that the effective measures and the creation of favourable conditions for the protection of persons belonging to minorities, ensuring effective non-discrimination and equality for all, contribute to the prevention and peaceful solution of problems involving minorities³⁸.

Indigenous people

In 1971, the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities was authorized by the Economic and Social Council to make a study of the problem of discrimination against indigenous populations. A world-wide review carried out by the Special Rapporteur discovered their considerable discrimination and called for a series of measures aimed at the improvement of this situation. The Sub-Commission in 1982 established a working group to prepare a draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples. The draft, completed in 1993, was transmitted for comments to governments and non-governmental organizations and, subsequently, to the Commission on Human Rights. Due to the fact that some articles of the draft declaration concerning, inter alia, the right to self-determination, or land rights are controversial, the Commission has not yet transmitted it to the General Assembly for adoption.

The World Conference on Human Rights recognized the inherent dignity and the unique contribution of indigenous people to the development and plurality of society. States should ensure the full and free participation of indigenous people in all aspects of society, in particular in matters of concern to them and should take concerted positive steps to ensure respect for all human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people, on the basis of equality and non-discrimination.

The General Assembly, as requested by the World Conference proclaimed an International Decade of the World's Indigenous People from January 1994³⁹ and adopted a Programme of Action for the Decade⁴⁰. The General Assembly affirmed that a major objective of the Decade is the adoption of a Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous People.

³⁸ Resolution 1996/20.

⁴⁰ The programme is contained in the annex to the General Assembly resolution 50/157.

As the elaboration of the such a Declaration by the Commission on Human Rights and the General Assembly will take some time, the only normative instrument on this subject is ILO Convention (N° 169) concerning Indigenous and Tribal peoples in Independent Countries, adopted by the International Labour Organisation in 1989⁴¹. It provides:

« Indigenous and tribal peoples shall enjoy the full measure of human rights and fundamental freedoms without hindrance or discrimination ... » and adds that:

« Special measures shall be adopted as appropriate for safeguarding the persons, institutions, property, labour, cultures and environment of the people concerned ».

Migrant workers and their families

The question of maltreatment and discrimination of migrant workers and their families has been on the agenda of ILO⁴² and, since the 1970s, on the agenda of the United Nations⁴³. In 1972 the Economic and Social Council adopted resolution 1706(LIII) in which it expressed deep concern over unlawful treatment of migrant workers close to slavery or forced labour. A few months later, the General Assembly reiterated this concern and, noting discrimination of which foreign workers were the victims in certain countries of Europe, called upon the governments concerned to put an end to this discriminatory treatment. It requested the Commission on Human Rights to consider the exploitation of labour through illicit and clandestine trafficking. The question was then presented to the sub-Commission which decided to deal with the illicit and clandestine operations and the discriminatory treatment of migrant workers in host countries. A special report on these aspects was prepared and discussed by the Sub-Commission. From 1976 to 1979, the General Assembly adopted a series of resolutions on measures to improve the situation and ensure the human rights and dignity of all migrant workers and called upon the commission on Human Rights and the Economic and Social Council to consider the question of migrant workers.

In 1979, the General Assembly decided to create a working group on the drafting of an International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families. The group after ten years, elaborated a very detailed draft of the Convention comprising 93 articles which, in 1990, was adopted by the General Assembly.

The Convention in Article 2 explains that the term 'migrant worker' refers to a person who is to be engaged, is engaged or has been engaged in a remunerated activity in a State of which he or she is not a national. Part II deals with non-discrimination with respect to their rights and obliges States Parties to undertake in accordance with the international human rights instruments, to respect and to ensure to all migrant workers and members of their families the rights provided for by the Convention without distinction of any kind. Part III in twenty-eight articles (8-35) enumerates their human rights starting with the right to leave any State, including their State of origin. Article 2 provides that no migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be held in slavery or servitude. For the purpose of reviewing, the application of the Convention foresees the establishment of a Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Their Families, comprising fourteen experts.

The Convention has not yet entered into force. It demands twenty ratifications to become binding. In 1996 it was only ratified by four States. The Commission on Human Rights, called upon all Member States to consider the possibility of signing and ratifying or acceding to the Convention as a matter of priority⁴⁴. It also urged countries of destination to review and adopt, as appropriate, measures to prevent the excessive use of force and to ensure that their police forces and competent migration authorities comply with the basic standards relating to the decent treatment of migrant workers and their families, inter alia, throughout the organisation of training courses on human rights.

It is worth noting that the European Convention on the Legal Status of Migrant Workers, adopted by the Council of Europe in 1977, entered into force on 1 May 1983.

Disabled persons and persons suffering from HIV/AIDS

As stated in paragraph 63 of the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action:

« Every person is born equal and has the same rights to life and welfare, education and work, living independently and active participation in all aspects of society. Any direct discrimination or other negative discriminatory treatment of a disabled person is therefore a violation of his or her rights ».

The World Conference called on governments to adopt or adjust legislation to assure access to these and other rights for disabled persons.

To protect the rights of disabled persons, the General Assembly adopted two declarations and a set of principles. In 1971, it proclaimed the Declaration on the Rights of Mentally Retarded Persons⁴⁵. The Declaration is based on the assumption that the mentally retarded person has, to the maximum degree of feasibility, the same rights as other human beings. Mentally retarded persons have a right to proper medical care and to such education which will enable them to develop their ability and maximum potential. They have a right to protection from exploitation, abuse and degrading treatment. In its paragraph, 7, the Declaration states that whenever mentally retarded persons are unable, because of the severity of their handicap, to exercise all their rights in a meaningful way or should it become necessary to restrict or deny some or all of these rights, the procedure used for that restriction or denial of rights must contain proper legal safeguards against every form of abuse.

⁴⁵ General Assembly resolution 2856(XXVI) of 20 December 1971.

In 1975, the General Assembly adopted the Declaration on the Rights of Disabled Persons⁴⁶ which defines, in its paragraph 1, 'disabled persons' as:

« ... any person unable to ensure by himself or herself wholly or partly, the necessities of a normal individual and/or social life, as a result of a deficiency, either congenital or not, in his or her physical or mental capabilities ».

The Declaration states, inter alia, that disabled persons have the inherent right to respect for their human dignity. They have the same civil and political rights as other human beings. Any possible limitation or suppression of those rights for mentally disabled persons is mentioned specifically in paragraph 7. Disabled persons have the right to medical, psychological and functional treatment. They also have the right to economic and social security and to a decent level of living.

The Principles for the Protection of Persons with Mental Illness and the Improvement of Mental Health Care⁴⁷ were adopted by the General Assembly in 1991 to serve as a guide to governments, specialized agencies, regional, national, international and non-governmental organizations and individuals. They define the fundamental freedoms and basic rights of persons with a mental illness or who are being treated as such. Principle 1 explains that special measures solely to protect the rights, or secure the advancement, of persons with mental illness shall not be deemed to be discriminatory.

In order to help disabled persons, to promote efforts to provide them with proper assistance, education, care and guidance as well as to educate and inform the public of the rights of disabled persons, the General Assembly proclaimed 1981 as the International Year for Disabled Persons and the period 1983-1992 as the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons⁴⁸.

A new problem of discrimination of HIV-infected people (people with AIDS) was raised by the resolution of the World Health Assembly in 1988. The Assembly called on the World Health Organization (WHO) to take all necessary measures to advocate the need to protect the human rights and dignity of people with HIV/AIDS. In its resolution of May 1992, the Assembly, declared that there is no public health rationale for any measures that limit arbitrarily the rights of the individual, notably measures establishing mandatory screening.

The Commission on Human Rights in its resolution 1996/43 on the protection of human rights in the context of human immuno-deficiency virus (HIV) and acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS), expressed its concern that people living with HIV/AIDS, as well as those presumed to be infected, continue to be discriminated against in law, policy and practice.

Aliens

In 1972, during its twenty-ninth Session, the Commission on Human Rights for the first time discussed violations of human rights of individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live. A year later the Economic and Social Council requested the Commission and its Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities to consider as a matter of priority the problem of the applicability of existing human rights standards to individuals who are not citizens of the country in which they live and to suggest which measures in the field of human rights, including the drafting of a declaration would be desirable.

In accordance with this request the Sub-Commission appointed a Special Rapporteur to carry out the study and to prepare a report on the subject. The full report was submitted to the Sub-Commission in 1976. It contained a manifold analysis of the status of aliens and, in Annex I, a draft Declaration on the Human Rights of Individuals Who are Not Citizens of the Country in Which They Live. The Sub-Commission examined the report and requested the Secretary-General to submit the draft declaration to governments for their consideration and comments. The Special Rapporteur taking into account views of governments prepared a revised version which in 1978 was transmitted to the Commission on Human Rights and then, through Economic and Social Council, to the General Assembly.

A final version of the draft Declaration was elaborated by a working group established by the General Assembly. The Declaration on the Human Rights of Individuals Who are Not Nationals of the Country in Which They Live was adopted by the General Assembly on 13 December 1985⁴⁹.

The Declaration in its Preamble proclaims that the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms provided for in international instruments should also be ensured for individuals who are not nationals of the country in which they live. As stipulated in Article 4, aliens shall enjoy in particular the following rights: to life and security of person; to protection against arbitrary or unlawful interference with privacy, family, home or correspondence; to be equal before the courts; to chose a spouse, to marry, to found a family; to freedom of thought, opinion, conscience and religion; to retain their own language, culture and traditions; to transfer abroad earnings, savings or other personal monetary assets. Subject to such restrictions as are presented by law and which are necessary in a democratic society, aliens shall also enjoy the right to leave the country; the right to freedom of expression; the right to peaceful assembly and the right to own property alone as well as in association with others. The Declaration does not contain however any provisions concerning its implementation.

UNESCO standard-setting instruments against discrimination in education and for the promotion of tolerance

The Convention Against Discrimination in Education

In accordance with its mandate, UNESCO has adopted a number of normative instruments aimed at the elimination of discrimination in its fields of competence. In 1958, the General Conference decided that UNESCO should assume responsibility for drafting an international convention on various aspects of discrimination in education. Two years later, in 1960, the General Conference adopted the Convention Against Discrimination in Education, which entered into force in 1962. In its Article 1 it explains that:

« ... the term «discrimination» includes any distinction, exclusion, limitation or preference which, being based on race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, economic condition or birth, has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing equality of treatment in education and in particular:

- (a) Of depriving any person or group of persons of access to education of any type or at any level;
- (b) Of limiting any person or group of persons to education of an inferior standard;
- (c) Subject to the provisions of article 2 of this Convention, of establishing or maintaining separate educational systems or institutions for persons or groups of persons; or
- (d) Of inflicting on any person or group of persons conditions which are incompatible with the dignity of man ».

The Convention is not only directed at the elimination of discrimination in education but also concerns the adoption of measures aimed at promoting equality of opportunity and treatment in this field. However, the obligations of States Parties differ in both cases. Under Article 3, they are obliged to take immediate measures to eliminate and prevent discrimination whereas, in relation to equality of opportunity, they apply a national policy by methods appropriate to the circumstances and to national usage.

At the same time, the General Conference also adopted the Recommendation Against Discrimination in Education, thus meeting the difficulties which some Member States may have had, for various reasons and in particular owing to their federal structures, in ratifying or adopting the Convention⁵⁰.

Since the adoption of the Convention and Recommendation, five consultations of Member States on the implementation of both instruments have been conducted. The General Conference decided in 1993 to initiate a sixth consultation to measure the progress achieved and the obstacles to be overcome with a view to ensuring equal opportunity and treatment in the sphere of education for all. The consultation will be focused on the basic education for women and girls, persons belonging to minorities, refugees and indigenous people.

⁵⁰ In 1996, 84 countries are bound by the Convention Against Discrimination in Education.

Member States have been requested to provide, by 20 November 1996, information on measures taken for avoiding situations which may lead to unintentional discrimination or unequal treatment, and report on specific measures to discourage women and girls from dropping out of school and to encourage them to pursue their studies in the fields of science and technology and in those fields which traditionally are occupied by men and boys. In the case of persons belonging to minorities, refugees and indigenous people, the main question to be answered is: do they benefit from equal access to education?

To supplement and strengthen the system of implementation of the Convention Against Discrimination in Education, the General Conference adopted, on 10 December 1962, the Protocol Instituting a Conciliation and Good Offices Commission (entered into force in 1968) to be responsible for seeking the settlement of any disputes which may arise between States Parties to the Convention⁵¹.

This comprises eleven members of high moral standing and acknowledged impartiality elected by the General Conference for a term of six years from a list of persons nominated by the States Parties. The members serve in their personal capacity. The Commission's mandate is, after obtaining all information, to ascertain the facts and make available its good offices to the States concerned with a view to an amicable solution of the matter. In every case, it draws up a report which is sent to the States concerned and then communicated to the Director-General for publication.

The Declaration of Principles on Tolerance

Discrimination and intolerance, as underlined by the UNESCO Medium-Term Strategy 1996-2001, often go hand in hand. The Organization has taken steps to organize a real 'crusade' against intolerance within the United Nations system. The General Assembly, at the initiative of UNESCO, proclaimed 1995 the United Nations Year for Tolerance and invited it to assume the role of lead organization for the Year. It called upon Member States to co-operate with UNESCO in the observance of national and international programmes and requested it to prepare for the conclusion of the Year a declaration of principles and a programme of action as a follow-up to the Year.

In conformity with its mandate as the responsible agency of the United Nations system for the Year of Tolerance, the Organization prepared for 1995 a diverse programme of meetings, concerts, broadcasts, festivals, publications, exhibitions, and other special events in all regions of the world. The Year's calendar of events included seven regional conferences.

Research carried out throughout the world on new forms of discrimination and ways of combating them, served as a basis for UNESCO's efforts to involve an increasing number of partners in promoting the idea, and above all, the practice of 'active' tolerance, which implies the desire to get to know other people, to understand what makes others different and to show respect for those differences. Tolerance is one of the great challenges of our time, as in principle all societies are pluralistic, diverse and diversified and many of them are multi-cultural and multi-religious.

The Declaration of Principles on Tolerance, foreseen by a General Assembly resolution, was adopted by the General Conference of UNESCO at its twenty-eighth session in 1995. In Article 1, it explains that:

« Tolerance is respect, acceptance and appreciation of the rich diversity of our world's cultures, our forms of expression and ways of being human. It is fostered by knowledge, openness, communication and freedom of thought, conscience and belief. Tolerance is harmony in difference. It is not only a moral duty, it is also a political and legal requirement ».

Article 2 stresses that tolerance requires that economic and social opportunities be made available to each person without any discrimination. States should ratify existing international human rights conventions and draft new legislation where necessary to ensure equality of treatment and opportunity for all groups and individuals in society. Education, as stated in Article 4, is the most effective means of preventing intolerance.

The General Conference urged Member States to communicate to the Director-General any information that they would like to share in order to increase understanding of the phenomenon associated with intolerance and the ideologies which preach intolerance, such as racism, fascism and anti-semitism, and the most effective measures for addressing these issues.

The Plan of Action for the Follow-up to the United Nations Year for Tolerance (1995) also adopted by the General Conference presents the causes and factors contributing to manifestations of intolerance around the world. It states that the aim of the follow-up programme is to transpose the most successful components of the United Nations Year for Tolerance into more enduring strategies and structures by which promotion and sensitisation of tolerance may be improved in every region of the world. The Plan of Action speaks about the mobilization of the United Nations system and underlines that the rights and responsibilities regarding tolerance and the right to be different are firmly established in human rights law.

The prohibition of all forms of discrimination - a fundamental principle of the international law of human rights

The prohibition of discrimination, as shown in this introduction, is formulated at present not only in the Charter of the United Nations and the International Bill of Human Rights but also in the impressive number of instruments dealing with discrimination on specific grounds or directed against persons belonging to vulnerable groups, adopted by the United Nations, the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and UNESCO. Standards concerning non-discrimination can also be found in a series of instruments adopted by regional organizations which, due to the limited size of this publication have not been reproduced⁵².

⁵² It does not comprise, inter alia, the American Convention on Human Rights (1969); the Convention on the Status of Aliens (1928); the Inter-American Convention on the Granting of Political Rights to Women (1948); the Inter-American Convention on the Granting of Civil Rights to Women (1948); the Inter-American Convention on the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Violence Against Women (1994); the African Charter on Human and People's Rights (1950); the European Convention on Human Rights (1950); the European Convention on the Legal Status of Migrant Workers (1977).

Implementation of conventional provisions imposing obligations on States is subject to control and verification procedures based on periodic State reports and also providing, as in the case of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Convention on the Elimination of Racial discrimination the possibility of individual communications⁵³. The treaty bodies, that is the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women, are authorized not only to consider States reports but also to formulate general recommendations.

The unquestionable progress achieved by the United Nations and the specialized agencies in the development of the international system of protection against discrimination does not mean that this system as a whole can now be recognized as fully satisfactory. The advancement of standards prohibiting discrimination of persons belonging to various vulnerable groups is uneven. In some cases the prohibition is established by conventions, in others by non-binding declarations. There are also vulnerable groups such as people with AIDS who are not protected by any specific instruments. The effectiveness of even the most advanced protection based on conventions is diminished by the fact that they are not ratified by all States, and that, at the moment of ratification or accession, many States Parties have deposited reservations. Therefore, in the light of these remarks, a call for further development of anti-discriminatory law seems to be fully justified.

Since 1946 all the United Nations organs dealing with human rights are actively involved in the struggle against discrimination. Questions linked with the elimination of discrimination are permanently dealt with by the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council, and the Commission on Human Rights which, in 1947, created the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. The Sub-Commission carries out studies whose aim was to ban discrimination. These studies are related amongst others to the right to education, the exercise of political rights, discrimination based on religion or beliefs, the elimination of racial discrimination, the rights of minorities and indigenous peoples. A number of these studies have led to the adoption of standard-setting instruments by the United Nations and UNESCO.

The legal and administrative means against discrimination including penal sanctions, though no doubt very important for the elimination and prevention of discrimination, are not sufficient. Therefore standard-setting instruments adopted by the United Nations and the specialized agencies also call for a change in traditional practices, the elimination of stereotypes and the use of education and the mass media in the struggle against discrimination. Although the duty to combat all forms of discrimination is first of all imposed on and undertaken by States, the importance of participation of national and international non-governmental organizations and individuals in the struggle against discrimination cannot be overlooked.

The human rights standards prohibiting discrimination can be effective and can determine individual behaviour only when they are known, when a public awareness and conviction are created. The dissemination of these standards is an obligation of the United Nations system. This publication has been prepared in the hope that it may in a modest way contribute to the struggle against discrimination and to the promotion of tolerance.

THE IMPLEMENTATION OF INTERNATIONAL STANDARDS ON PREVENTION AND ELIMINATION OF RACIAL DISCRIMINATION: ACHIEVEMENTS AND CHALLENGES

Rüdiger WOLFRUM*

The prohibition of racial discrimination in international law

Although the United Nations Charter does not contain a catalogue of human rights and fundamental freedoms and instead entrusts the General Assembly with the task of promoting the development of the relevant instruments, it does already formulate the rule of non-discrimination as a directly binding principle¹. The United Nations Charter expressly mentions only four criteria which must not be used as an excuse for differential treatment: race, sex, language and religion². These criteria were considerably enlarged by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of 1948 which adds «colour, political or other opinions, national or social origin, property, birth or other status» to the catalogue. It further states that all persons are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law.

All international human rights instruments dealing with the protection of human rights, either on the universal or the regional level, contain a provision prohibiting racial discrimination. Compared to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (ICERD), they either cover specific aspects only or are of a general nature. The first international treaty to deal with one particular aspect of racial discrimination was the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide of 1948. According to its Article II, genocide means specific acts committed with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnic, racial or religious group. However, there are very few occasions in which the Genocide Convention has been invoked on the international or national level. This may change when the International Criminal Court, which will deal with violations of humanitarian law, has resumed its functions. Since discrimination in respect of employment and occupation is common, the International Labour Organisation (ILO), already in its Declaration of Philadelphia of 1944, affirmed that all human beings, irrespective of race, creed or sex, have the right to pursue both their material well-being and their spiritual development in conditions of freedom and dignity, of economic security and equal opportunity. This principle was transformed into an international treaty by ILO Convention (N° 111) Concerning Discrimination in Respect of Employment and Occupation of 1960. It prohibits any distinction, exclusion or preference made on the basis of race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin which has the effect of nullifying or impairing equality of opportunity or treatment in employment or occupation. The Convention against Discrimination in Education, adopted on 14 December 1960 by the UNESCO General Conference, follows the approach adopted by the ILO Convention N° 111 and prohibits any discrimination based on race, colour, sex, language, economic condition or birth which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing equality of treatment in education. Further specific aspects of racial discrimination are dealt with in the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid, and in the International Convention against Apartheid in Sports. Finally, the prohibition of racial discrimination is enshrined in: Article 3 of the Convention relating to the Status of Stateless Persons, 1954; Article 3 of the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees, 1951; Article 1 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment; 1984; Article 2 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child, 1989; and in Article 85, paragraph 4 of the Additional Protocol (Protocol I) to the Geneva Conventions of 12 August 1949 on the Protection of Victims of International Armed Conflicts, 1977.

The two International Covenants on Human Rights of 1966 follow a more general approach. They copied the catalogue of the Universal Declaration verbatim; States Parties to the Covenants undertake to guarantee that the rights enunciated in them will be exercised without discrimination of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language, etc.

On 12 December 1960, the General Assembly in reacting to acts of antisemitism, particularly in Germany, condemned all forms of racial, religious and national hatred in political, economic, social, educational and cultural affairs as a violation of the United Nations Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights³. In the subsequent Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination⁴, the General Assembly stated that discrimination between human beings on the grounds of race, colour or ethnic origin is an offence to human dignity and shall be condemned as a denial of the principles of the United Nations Charter and as a violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The Declaration of 1963 formed the basis of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination adopted and opened for signature by the General Assembly only two years later. According to Article 2, States Parties to ICERD are under an obligation to pursue a policy of eliminating racial discrimination in all its forms. States Parties are obliged not to engage in acts or practices of racial discrimination, not to sponsor or support racial discrimination by any persons or organizations and to review governmental, national and local policies with a view to eliminating any laws, regulations or practices of a discriminatory nature or effect. In accordance with this fundamental obligation, States Parties guarantee the right to everyone, without distinction as to race, colour, or national or ethnic origin, to equality before the law and in the enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights as referred to in Article 5 of ³ A/Res./1510(XV).

ICERD. Further, States Parties have undertaken to bring to an end, by all appropriate means, racial discrimination by any persons, groups or organizations. Certain offences have to be declared as an offence punishable by law⁵; organizations which promote and incite racial discrimination are to be prohibited and the participation therein is to be punished. States Parties have further undertaken to adopt measures in the field of teaching, education, culture and information with a view to combating prejudices which lead to racial discrimination. Finally, ICERD opens the possibility of affirmative actions vis-à-vis ethnic groups.

The implementation system in general

The implementation of international human rights instruments is the responsibility of the States Parties themselves. This is equally true for ICERD which, however, provides, through Part II (Articles 8-16)⁶, a system for the review of the fulfilment of their obligations by the States Parties. This system is commonly referred to as the implementation system. When drafted for ICERD, such a system was regarded not only as an essential part of the Convention but also as a major step in the progressive development of instruments for the implementation of human rights.

⁵ See Article 4, paragraph (a) of ICERD.

⁶ For a description of the earlier system, see: Proceedings of the Nobel Symposium on International Protection of Human Rights, 1967; K.J. Partsch, Racial Discrimination : The United Nations Convention and its Functioning, United Nations, 1971, pp. 1-8 and 46-53; Schwelb, « Civil and political rights: the international measures of implementation », American Journal of International Law, 62, 1968, pp. 827 et seq.; E. Schwelb, « Some aspects of the measures of implementation of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, Human Rights, 1-3, 1968, pp. 377 et seq.; the most recent detailed analysis is to be found in K.J. Partsch, « The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination » in P. Alston (ed.) The United Nations and Human Rights, 1992, pp. 339-368; a detailed analysis of the implementation system of all human rights treaties is contained in the report of P. Alston, « Effective implementation of international instruments on human rights, including reporting obligations under international instruments of human rights: interim report on updated study ». A/Conf.157/PC/62 Add.11/Rev.1.

However, the implementation system is less effective than those enshrined in the European Convention on Human Rights or in the ILO system⁷. Specifications to the implementation system are contained in the Rules of Procedure of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination⁸, (CERD), namely Rules 63-96. These Rules of Procedure have been changed considerably over time with a view to increasing the effectiveness of the Committee and keeping the implementation procedure in line with comparable developments in other human rights treaty bodies. Generally speaking, the developments within the human rights treaty bodies concerning implementation procedures have stimulated each other and have gained momentum since the chairpersons of the human rights treaty bodies meet on a regular basis⁹.

The implementation system created by ICERD consists essentially of three procedures: a reporting procedure¹⁰

⁸ CERD/C/35/Rev.3; between 1970 and 1984 the Committee worked on the basis of «Provisional Rules of Procedure».

obligatory for all States Parties (Article 9, Rules 63-68); a procedure of State-to-State complaints¹¹ which is open to all States Parties (Articles 11, 12, 13 and 16, Rules 69-79)¹² and the right of petition - communications in the language of Article 14 - by individuals or groups of individuals within the jurisdiction of States Parties claiming to be victims of a violation by that State of any of their rights set forth in the Convention (Article 14, Rules 80-97). In addition, Part II of the Convention assigns to the Committee certain advisory responsibilities relating to the attainment of the principles and objectives of the Convention in Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories and all other territories to which Article 15 of General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV)¹³ of 14 December 1960 applies as well as the duty to report on all its activities, including its opinions, suggestions and general recommendations, to the General Assembly of the United Nations. Until now, the Committee has devoted the majority of its work to examining States' reports received under Article 9 which focuses on the reporting system and its development. As of the end of 1993, the Committee has received no formal inter-State and only four individual communications.

In general, the system of receiving and examining reports as applied by the other treaty bodies is quite similar to that described for CERD. The same is true with respect to individual communications, although the Human Rights Committee

On this procedure in general see C. Tomuschat, «Human Rights, Individual Complaints», R. Wolfrum (ed.), United Nations Yearbook, 2nd ed., 1992, pp. 551-558; M. established under Article 28, paragraph 1 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, was more successful in establishing a practice in dealing with and examining individual communications¹⁴.

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD)

The monitoring functions concerning the implementation of the Convention are entrusted to the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (hereinafter the Committee) which comprises eighteen experts of «high moral standing and acknowledged impartiality» elected by the States Parties from amongst their nationals (Article 8). The word «experts» is used in a broad sense as referring to expertise in racial discrimination and related fields¹⁵. Thus it is of consequence when Article 8, paragraph 1, states that they serve in their personal capacity only, meaning that they are not agents or representatives of any government. They may not seek instructions nor must governments attempt to influence them¹⁶. However, States Parties wield some influence upon the composition of the Committee since its members may only be elected from a list of persons nominated by States Parties (Article 8, paragraph 2). Nevertheless, the Committee is, according to the letter and spirit of the Convention, to act as an expert body detached from the political interests of the States Parties having nominated them¹⁷. In their election, consideration is given to equitable geographical distribution and to «... the representation of the different forms of civilization as well as of the principal legal systems». The intention of this paragraph, as of similar provisions in other international instruments¹⁸, is that the experts should represent as many geographical regions and as many legal systems and cultures as possible¹⁹. In fact, the criterion of equitable geographical distribution prevails. As of August 1993, the geographical distribution of experts was as follows: Africa 3; Asia 4; Latin America 4; Eastern Europe 3; Western Europe and others 4. The principle of equitable geographical distribution also applies to the composition of the Bureau (a chairperson, three vice-chairpersons and a rapporteur)²⁰.

¹⁴ For details, see especially Tomuschat (Note 10) at pp. 555 et seq.; on the Human Rights Committee; see especially T. Opsahl, « The Human Rights Committee » in P. Alston (ed.), The United Nations and Human Rights, 1992, pp. 369-443.

¹⁵ No specific professional qualifications are required; in this respect the composition of the Committee differs from that of the Human Rights Committee.

¹⁶ The impartiality of the experts may not only be endangered by the States Parties having nominated a given expert (for details in this respect, see Partsch (Note 6) at pp. 340 et seq.) but by other States Parties, too. The Committee at one point felt it mandatory to strongly object to the tendency «... to put pressure upon experts, especially those serving as country-rapporteurs» and to remind States Parties «... to respect unreservedly the status of its members as independent experts of acknowledged impartiality serving in their personal capacity.» (Recommendation IX, 38th Session, 1990).

Reporting system

Under Article 9, paragraph 1, of the Convention:

«States Parties undertake to submit to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, for consideration by the Committee, a report on the legislative, judicial, administrative or other

¹⁷ According to Rule 14, each expert, in assuming his or her duties, makes a solemn declaration similar to the one of the judges to the International Court of Justice: «I solemnly declare that I will perform my duties and exercise my powers as a member of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination honourably, faithfully, impartially and conscientiously».

¹⁸ As to the Human Rights Committee and the Committee for Economic, Social and Cultural Rights see C. Tomuschat, «Human Rights Covenants and their executive organs» in R. Wolfrum (ed.), United Nations Yearbook, 2nd ed., 1992, pp. 583-591 (pp. 589 et seq.); Opsahl (Note 14) at pp. 372 et seq.

²⁰ The chairperson is elected in accordance with the following regional sequence which was established at an early stage to reflect the number of ratifications from each region: Asia, Latin America, Africa, Western Europe, and Eastern Europe. However, this rotation scheme has been set aside several times for different reasons; for details, see Patsch (Note 6), pp. 340 et seq. In general, the chairperson is first agreed upon in the regional group and elected by consensus.

measures which they have adopted and which give effect to the provisions of this Convention: (a) within one year after the entry into force of the Convention for the State concerned; and (b) thereafter every two years and whenever the Committee so requests. The Committee may request further information from the States Parties».

In dealing with the reports submitted by States Parties, the Committee had to address over the years several issues and, by gradually deciding upon them, further developed and refined the reporting system. These issues included the question whether a State Party should be present when its own report is discussed; how to deal with overdue reports; the content of reports; the appointment of country-rapporteurs; the information which may be used by the experts when considering the reports of States Parties and whether the Committee should formulate concluding observations after having finished the examination of a report. These issues are not just of a technical nature. The Committee's approach in addressing them and thereby further developing the reporting system reflects and reveals changes in the Committee's perception of the objectives pursued through the reporting system.

Article 9, paragraph 1, of ICERD declares the responsibility of States Parties towards the Convention, whereas Article 9, paragraph 2, states the Committee's subsequent reporting duties vis-à-vis the General Assembly. By separating these sets of obligations into two paragraphs, the Convention indicates that the Committee's work is to proceed through two stages: first, fact-finding; and, secondly, making suggestions or general recommendations.

As far as the expected content of the reports is concerned, ICERD provides little guidance to the States Parties. According to Article 9, paragraph 1, of ICERD, States Parties have to report on «... legislative, judicial, administrative and other measures which they have adopted and which give effect to the provisions of this Convention». Unfortunately, ICERD does not authorize the Committee to issue a questionnaire as a basis on which States could prepare their reports²¹. It has instead

While the original guidelines did not follow the system of ICERD²², they have since been rewritten so as to refer systematically to the various articles²³. In addition, the revised guidelines²⁴ request or invite information on, inter alia, the

As far as the demographic composition is concerned, the Guidelines also refer to General Recommendation IV in requesting «States Parties to endeavour to include in their reports ... information on the demographic composition of the population ...»²⁵. However, the Committee quite often faces opposition regarding this information. Some States Parties do not recognize the concept of «national» or «ethnic» groups. Others consider an investigation into ethnicity to be inherently discriminatory and thus do not request such details in national censuses. The Committee has, however, insisted in obtaining such information²⁶ and on various occasions has had to be satisfied with estimates. It has countered the objections raised by the States Parties by arguing that it would be impossible for them to fulfil the obligations under Article 1, paragraph 4, Article 2, paragraph 1(e) and especially Article 2, paragraph 2 of ICERD if no information existed as to the demographic composition of the population.

Equally unsatisfactory are in practice the reports on Article 4 of ICERD. According to this provision, States Parties are under an obligation «... to declare an offence punishable by law all dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred, incitement to racial discrimination, as well as acts of violence or incitement to such acts against any race or group of persons of another colour or ethnic origin, and also transformed into internal laws or administrative regulations in order to be enforced by the authorities concerned; the provision of any assistance to racist activities, including the financing thereof».

Further, under sub-paragraph (b) of this provision, States Parties:

«... shall declare illegal and prohibit organizations, and also organized and all other propaganda activities, which promote and incite racial discrimination, and shall recognize participation in such organizations or activities as an offence punishable by law».

Several of the States Parties have not enacted relevant legislation, arguing that no such activity existed and, hence, legislation was unnecessary. Most of the reports contain little if any reference to court rulings concerning the prosecution of persons in accordance with Article 4 of ICERD. Those reports which provide such information often lack details concerning the facts of the cases and the sentences rendered. Thus the Committee felt it necessary to remind States Parties of their obligations under Article 4 of ICERD and to ask for more detailed information²⁷. Such a move is of particular relevance taking into account the emergence of new forms of racism and xenophobia in Europe. It remains to be seen whether the Committee will increasingly focus its attention upon the implementation of this provision of ICERD.

Finally, Article 7 which obliges States Parties to undertake measures in the fields of education and teaching with a view to combating racial prejudice, presents particular reporting difficulties. The Committee has complained that the reporting on these obligations has been unsatisfactory²⁸. To remedy this situation, the Committee asked UNESCO to help draft reporting guidelines. The response consisted of an extensive list of more than 90 questions²⁹. On the basis of UNESCO's draft and other proposals, the Committee issued a short text which defines (with examples) the State's reporting duties with respect to each of the distinct topics of Article 7: education and teaching, culture and information³⁰. However, this had little effect on the reporting.

ICERD and the Rules of Procedure give little indication about the procedure to be followed by the Committee in examining reports. Over the years, the Committee has developed the following practice. The examination of reports usually begins with an introductory statement by the representative of the reporting State. This statement need only consist of general remarks, although in practice new substantive information is often provided. This introduction is followed by the presentation of the country-rapporteur and the questions asked or suggestions and opinions voiced by the experts. After the Committee members have completed their observations and questioning, the State's representative is once again invited to take the floor. This is followed by another round of questions and remarks from the experts and a reply from the representative of the State Party concerned. The examination of each report is now concluded by the «Concluding Observations» which are formulated in the absence of the representative of the reporting State, although in public meeting. The development of this procedure was undertaken gradually. Some of its important elements met with resistance and it was only possible to introduce them after considerable debate.

The decision to allow representatives of States Parties to be present when their reports are discussed was only taken upon recommendation of the General Assembly³¹. Only this decision has made it possible to establish a constructive dialogue between the experts and the representatives of States Parties. Hence it has to be regarded as one of the most important innovations concerning the working methods of the Committee. In drafting its Rules of Procedure, the Human Rights Committee included a similar provision for having representatives of States Parties attend its meetings³².

The introduction of the system of country-rapporteurs, which was decided upon in 1988, represents another major change in the procedure of the Committee. Such a system has been used by the ILO for decades and has influenced the decision of the Committee. Proposals for appointing country-rapporteurs were first advanced in 1974 and repeated at a closed meeting in 1986³³. In 1988, the Committee was confronted with a substantial backlog of reports awaiting consideration. It was proposed that the Committee divide into smaller working groups to speed up consideration³⁴. A working group was appointed which recommended the appointment of rapporteurs³⁵. This was adopted on a trial basis³⁶. Six members volunteered to serve in this capacity and were allocated reports by the Bureau³⁷. ICERD's annual report for 1988 in paragraphs 21 and 24(b) described the responsibilities of a country-rapporteur as being to prepare «a thorough study and evaluation of each State report, to prepare a comprehensive list of questions to put to the representatives of the reporting State and to lead the discussion in the Committee».

Later, the Chairpersons' meeting³⁸ recommended that treaty bodies consider the appointment of rapporteurs. ICERD reviewed its country-rapporteur system, as it stood in 1989. Its annual report, in paragraphs 24 and 26(d), indicated that the introduction of the system had been successful in terms that have been recapitulated in the 1990 report (paragraph 34), the 1991 report (paragraph 37) and the 1992 report (paragraph 41)³⁹.

³⁸ A/44/98, 17 paragraph 57 and 24 paragraph 91.

³⁹ Since 1988, country-rapporteurs have not had reports allocated to them by the Bureau. A list of reports has been circulated and members volunteering to serve have so indicated to the Committee's Rapporteur. The members volunteering have increased so that, by 1992, 16 out of 18 members had volunteered. In that year, the Committee briefly considered its method of allocation; it was agreed that no member should be responsible for serving as country-rapporteur for two successive reports from the same State, or be called upon to evaluate the report of his or her own country. It was also thought inappropriate for someone to volunteer if there was tension between the State of which the member was a national and the reporting State. Annexes have been included in the annual report indicating which members served as country-rapporteurs for which reports, and which country-rapporteurs have been appointed for the next session.

The country-rapporteur procedure has facilitated a division of labour between members of the Committee. Apart from that under the new procedure, the Committee has often experienced commentaries of a quality which was rarely achieved under the previous procedure.

ICERD does not give clear guidance as to how the Committee may react either to reports which do not meet the reporting requirements of ICERD or the Guidelines, or when a State Party has been found to have not fully met its obligations concerning the implementation of ICERD. The Committee has changed its policy in this respect over the years.

First of all, ICERD does not specify which information the experts may use to assess the reports. Some experts have argued that the Committee should make suggestions and general recommendations in accordance with Article 9, paragraph 2 of ICERD solely on the basis of information submitted by that State Party.⁴⁰ Eventually the Committee decided that Article 9, paragraph 2 permits the consideration of any official documents of the reporting State, including legislation, government declarations and parliamentary papers (which might include speeches by the government's opponents) - whether or not these are quoted in the State's report⁴¹. Over a long period, the Committee did not accept information provided by non-governmental organizations or by the mass media⁴². This policy, however, has been changed following the example of other human rights treaty bodies.⁴³

⁴⁰ For the early practice of the Committee, see Partsch (Note 6), pp. 351 et seq. The limitations of this interpretation, however, led to its early rejection. During a discussion on co-operation with the ILO and UNESCO, differing views were expressed on the use of information provided by these organizations. The UN Office of Legal Affairs issued an opinion on the use of information in which it was stated that nothing in CERD indicated that the Committee was limited to the data received by States Parties in its primary consideration of reports and in particular in formulating requests for further information (United Nations Juridical Yearbook 1972, p. 164, paragraph 4(a)).

⁴¹ Confirmed by the chairman, CERD C/SR.296 (1976), paragraph 57.

⁴² In 1977, the Committee discussed and rejected a suggestion made in the Third Committee that CERD might benefit from the knowledge and experience of non-governmental organizations (Report, paragraph 29).

⁴³ See Manual on Human Rights Reporting, 1991, p. 121 regarding the Human Rights Committee; p. 174, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination of Women; p. 188 the Committee against Torture.

The chairpersons of the human rights treaty bodies have focused on the need for the committees to have at their disposal a wide range of information if they are to function effectively. Accordingly, they have recommended on sources of information:

«To assist it in the fulfilment of its responsibilities, each of the treaty bodies should have access to all of the sources of information that it feels it needs in order to be effective. In this regard, information provided by non-governmental organizations can be of major importance. The treaty bodies should also take full advantage of the expertise and experience of the specialized agencies and other United Nations bodies whenever appropriate»⁴⁴.

The Committee has adopted this recommendation⁴⁵. It was felt that it was incompatible with the status of an independent expert to be restricted in the use of whatever information he or she felt appropriate. This change of procedure has considerably deepened the level of consideration of reports in the Committee and has moved the reporting system more in the direction of fact-finding.

As to the reaction to reports following its examination, the Convention does not provide the Committee with the power to reject a report. It may only «request further information» (Article 9, paragraph 1) and may make «suggestions and general recommendations» (Article 9, paragraph 2). Theoretically two different decisions may be taken by the Committee: first, that the information provided for was not sufficient to enable the Committee to carry out its function and, second, that the State Party concerned has failed to fully implement the obligations assumed under the Convention. The Committee has paraphrased these two possible reactions to a report in procedural terms. Rule 67, paragraph 1, of its Rules of Procedure states in part that:

«When considering a report submitted by a State Party under Article 9, the Committee shall first determine whether the report provides the information referred to in the relevant communications of the Committee. If a report of the State Party to the Convention, in the opinion of the Committee, does not contain sufficient information, the Committee may request that State to furnish additional information».

⁴⁴ A/45/636, p. 16, paragraph 68.

⁴⁵ See Decision 1 (XL), A/46/18, p. 104.

In applying this rule, the Committee evaluates each State's report with respect to the formal reporting guidelines, taking account of that State's previous reports. The members seek to determine: whether the information requested in earlier reports has been delivered; whether information missing in previous reports is included in the report under consideration; whether questions initially incompletely answered have now been responded to fully; and whether new developments in the reporting country give rise to a need for additional information.

During its early years the Committee did not fully distinguish between these two possible decisions. It would conclude its examination of reports by qualifying them as satisfactory or unsatisfactory, without indicating whether unsatisfactory reports lacked sufficient information or whether the reporting State had failed to comply with its substantive obligations under the Convention⁴⁶. In 1972, the Committee amended its Rules of Procedure (now Rule 67), in order to distinguish more clearly the two phases of its evaluation. In addition to paragraphs 1 and 2 of Rule 67, it introduced Rule 67, paragraph 3 which provides that « ... if, on the basis of its examination, the reports and information supplied by the State Party, the Committee determines that some of the obligations of that State under the Convention have not been discharged, it may make suggestions and general recommendations in accordance with Article 9, paragraph 2 of the Convention».

However, in its most recent practice, the Committee has asked for additional information also in cases where it felt that a State Party had not fully discharged the obligations under the

Convention, thus closing again the distinction between the two stages of examining reports. In this respect, requesting further information was regarded as a kind of verdict concerning the situation in the given State Party.

Another means for the Committee to express its opinion upon the situation in a given State Party are «concluding observations». At its 891st meeting, the Committee discussed possible improvements in the style and content of its report to the General Assembly, following upon the criticism in the Alston report⁴⁷ and upon the argument in that report for «concluding observations» to be made by individual experts. The discussion took up a desire voiced earlier⁴⁸ for the Committee to agree a collective assessment of a report rather than list a set of individual assessments. The outcome was described in the annual report for 1991 in paragraph 31⁴⁹, which stated that the relevant section of the report would contain:

«... concluding observations on the report and the comments made by the State Party concerning the situation regarding racial discrimination in the country concerned».

The Committee at its 39th session decided that the adoption of the country-rapporteur procedure enabled it to go further towards the adoption of a common statement embodying a collective opinion. After the representative of the reporting State has replied to questions and left the Committee table, the Chairman invites the country-rapporteur to propose a conclusion about progress in the implementation of the Convention in the State in question. Other members may then suggest additions or modifications to it. Since the 43rd session, the Secretariat prepares the concluding observations as in the practice of the Human Rights Committee. They are then submitted to the Committee.

The Committee adopted concluding observations in 1991 regarding sixteen reporting and thirteen non-reporting States and, in 1992, regarding nine reporting and nine non-reporting States. The procedure for drafting these observations since 1992 is that the country-rapporteur is asked to circulate a draft within the Committee, to take account of the comments of colleagues and then to present at a later session a draft which could be adopted by consensus. Some of the observations adopted in that year made reference to particular general recommendations of the Committee.

The Human Rights Committee concludes its examination of reports by «concluding observations of individual members». These contain an assessment of the human rights situation prevailing in the respective State Party on which concern on specific issues may be expressed⁵⁰. At its 43rd and 44th sessions, the Committee reviewed its methods of work as far as reports are concerned⁵¹. It decided that comments would be adopted reflecting the views of the Committee as a whole at the end of each State Party report. These comments are not meant to replace comments made by members; they are more detailed than the concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of all Forms of Racial Discrimination and, in general, cover the following points: positive aspects; factors and difficulties impeding the application of the Covenant; principal subjects of concern; and suggestions and recommendations. In adopting this procedure the Human Rights Committee has emphasized its monitoring functions.

In recent years, all human rights treaty bodies and particularly the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination have encountered the problem that States parties do not meet their reporting requirements⁵². This endangers the monitoring functions of the human rights treaty bodies. By 15 March 1993, 1,009 reports were overdue from 499 States Parties. As for the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, according to a note by the Secretary-General⁵³, 309 reports from as many as 109 States Parties were due up to the closing date of the 43rd session of the Committee (20 August 1993).

⁵³ CERD/C/245.

These problems were identified early by the General Assembly and the Commission on Human Rights as well as by the treaty bodies. Several suggestions have been made and implemented to remedy the situation, so far however with little success.

The General Assembly first decided to include on its agenda an item on the reporting obligations of States Parties under United Nations human rights instruments in its resolution 37/44 of 3 December 1982. At the General Assembly's request⁵⁴, the Secretary-General prepared an analysis of the reporting system based on observations made by States Parties. The report proposed an extension of the periodicity from two to four years, the convening of periodic meetings of the chairpersons of the major human rights supervisory bodies and the intensification of technical assistance provided for States Parties in the form of seminars, training programmes and expert advice⁵⁵. In March 1984, the Committee supported the latter suggestion but opposed the first. The Committee noted that the extension of the required periodicity would only have a negative effect, since it would weaken the obligations assumed by States. It also noted that internal rules of procedure provided for a degree of flexibility which could readily be used to ease the burden on States experiencing temporary difficulties with their reporting⁵⁶. The General Assembly has continued to consider and express its concern at problems relating to the reporting obligations under the various human rights instruments, as well as their effective monitoring by the bodies created under those instruments, at each of its sessions and has adopted relevant resolutions⁵⁷. In making its procedural recommendations, the General Assembly has based itself upon the suggestions voiced in the meetings of the chairpersons of the treaty bodies⁵⁸. Equally the Commission on Human Rights has adopted resolutions reflecting its concerns and recommendations⁵⁹.

The reasons for delaying reports are different in kind. They may result from a lack of personnel, a lack of political will or excessive international reporting obligations. The measures taken by the Committee to improve reporting had to reflect the diversity of reasons which cause delay in submission of reports.

The Committee has taken various steps in respect of States Parties whose reports are overdue. When reports are late the Committee sends reminders to governments through the Secretary-General and a list of these reminders appears in its annual report to the General Assembly. If such reminders are ignored, letters are written to heads of governments, direct contacts undertaken with the State delegations at UN Headquarters and Secretariat advice is offered to the State concerned⁶⁰.

The Committee decided at its 39th session (March 1991) to review the implementation of the Convention in those States Parties whose periodic reports were excessively overdue. The annual report for that year states that, in the case of reports excessively overdue, the Committee «... agreed that this review would be based upon the last reports submitted by the State Party concerned and their consideration by the Committee»⁶¹. In 1991, the Committee wrote in these terms to thirteen States⁶². This action has been taken in respect of States whose periodic reports are six years overdue. Several of the States Parties addressed requests for postponements. The Committee, however, agreed only to postpone until its following session the consideration of reports of those States which undertook to submit their overdue reports in the interim. Since then identical letters have been sent to these States inviting them to designate a representative to participate and to furnish relevant information.

The Committee felt such practice to be in conformity with Article 9, paragraph 2, of the Convention which entrusts the Committee «... to make suggestions and general recommendations based on the examination of the reports and information received from States Parties ...». These words do not restrict the Committee to only review the most up-to-date information. However, this practice will fail vis-à-vis States Parties which have not even submitted an initial report. The respective practice of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights in this respect is somewhat more forthcoming.

So far, the practice of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination has turned out to be quite successful. Several reviews have been undertaken on the basis of previous reports. In some cases the States Parties concerned have taken the opportunity to submit their report. Apart from that, an increasing number of States Parties have participated in the review and have thus resumed the dialogue with the Committee.

At its 47th session, the General Assembly recommended that other treaty bodies adopt measures similar to the practice of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to proceed with the examination of the situation in States Parties whose reports were long overdue, on the basis of existing information.⁶³ It was further recommended that each treaty body follow, as a last resort and to the extent appropriate, the practice of scheduling for consideration the situation in States Parties which have consistently failed to report or whose reports are long overdue. This recommendation was based upon the consideration that a persistent and long-term failure to report should not result in the State Party concerned being immune from supervision, while others which have reported are subject to careful monitoring.

Taking into account that the delay in reporting may result from the States Parties being overburdened by increasing reporting obligations, the Committee has attempted to facilitate this procedure. In 1988 the Committee agreed that after submission of an initial comprehensive report, States Parties might on the next occasion submit a brief updated report⁶⁴. Comprehensive reports shall be submitted every four years with updated reports on the intervening occasion. Further, the Committee has agreed to permit States Parties to submit several overdue reports in one comprehensive document and, where a government has explained the reason for the delay in its report, the Committee will abstain from sending reminders. Finally, the chairpersons recommended that the States Parties elaborate a «core document» containing background information on the political, factual and legal situation relevant for the consideration of reports of States Parties in the human rights treaty bodies. It was suggested that particular attention be paid in such a document to information concerning the political system, the main features of the legal order, the legal status of international instruments within the national legal system, the recourse procedures for the protection of human rights, demographic data and other relevant economic, social and cultural data. This procedure has been increasingly accepted in practice. Apart from facilitating the task of the States Parties, such a procedure helps to ensure that all treaty bodies receive the same information. This may harmonize the assessment of the human rights situation prevailing in the States Parties through the treaty bodies.

Finally, the Committee has suggested that advisory services be provided to States Parties whose reports are overdue⁶⁵. The Committee suggested organizing a series of workshops and seminars at the national level for the purpose of training those involved in the preparation of State reports⁶⁶.

When assessing the reporting system, it has to be stated that it has undergone significant changes. In introducing such changes, the Committee has altered the objective of the reporting system. At the beginning when representatives of States Parties were not allowed to present orally the reports, the Committee was not in a position to engage in a dialogue with the respective State Party. It could only collect information and, on this basis, make general recommendations to the General Assembly concerning the elimination of racial discrimination. Hence, in this early period, the reporting system only provided rudimentary means to monitor the implementation of the ⁶⁵ Recommendation X (1991) which is based upon the recommendation of the third meeting of chairpersons of treaty bodies (A/46/18).

⁶⁶ Alston is in this respect (Note 6) on p. 48 and suggests to appoint one or more individuals whose sole responsibility would be to assist States Parties to fulfil their reporting obligations.

Convention, greater emphasis being placed upon the Committee as an expert body which provided the General Assembly with information which would enable the latter to discuss the elimination of racial discrimination. This element of the reporting system has receded into the background, as reflected by the fact that the topic «elimination of racial discrimination» no longer plays a prominent role in the deliberations of the General Assembly. Instead, by involving representatives of the reporting States, by allowing the Committee to use information other than that provided by the reporting State Party and by formulating «concluding observations», the Committee focuses more heavily upon the monitoring of the situation in the States Parties. Nevertheless, the Committee does not work and is not intended to work as a court. Quite frequently experts point out that they are primarily interested in establishing and upholding a dialogue with the States Parties. This is why there is considerable effort to convince States Parties whose reports are overdue to resume co-operation with the Committee.

There exists one further facet to the reporting system, which was emphasized by the General Assembly in its resolution 43/115:

«The effective implementation of instruments of human rights, involving periodic reporting by States Parties to the relevant treaty bodies ... not only enhances international accountability in relation to the protection and promotion of human rights but also provides States Parties with a valuable opportunity to review policies and programmes affecting the protection and promotion of human rights and to make any appropriate adjustments».

This point, namely that the reporting should be used to initiate an evolutionary process with a view to fostering the implementation of the Convention, is further emphasized by Alston⁶⁷. He states:

«It is all too often forgotten (or ignored) that the monitoring role played by the international treaty bodies is, for the most part, only a secondary or catalytic one. The primary role in the procedure should, and indeed must, if the process is to be truly effective, be that played by all of the relevant actors at the national level».

However, in reality, the States Parties have almost complete control over the preparation of their reports. There exists no obligation to involve non-governmental organizations in their preparation. Equally States Parties are not bound to publish their reports nationally. Nevertheless, by making their reports as well as the human rights instruments widely public, the States Parties could make a contribution to a more effective implementation system.

Equally, the Committee could work in that direction. In spite of the fact that ICERD is silent as to the publicity of the work of the Committee, improvements have been suggested by the chairpersons of treaty bodies:

«Particular importance should be attached to the dissemination at the national level of the report of the relevant State Party and details of its examination by the Committee, especially to those sectors which have direct responsibility for the implementation of human rights, such as the judiciary, the legal profession, appropriate ministries and national human rights bodies. For that reason, each United Nations information office should, on a routine basis, make available all reports submitted to the treaty bodies by the State in whose territory it is located, along with the summary records relating to the examination of the reports. The Secretary-General should be requested to report on the implementation of this recommendation in due course».

In reality it proves to be quite difficult to increase the coverage of mass media on human rights issues. The mass media are interested in grave violations of human rights and the exchange of political statements and not in the unspectacular assessment of State reports.

Inter-State Complaints

Articles 11-13 of the Convention authorize the Committee to deal with complaints submitted by States alleging discriminatory practices on the part of other States Parties. Article 11, paragraph 1 provides:

«If a State Party considers that another State Party is not giving effect to the provisions of this Convention, it may bring the matter to the attention of the Committee. The Committee shall then transmit the communication to the State Party concerned. Within three months, the receiving State shall submit to the Committee written explanations or statements clarifying the matter and the remedy, if any, that may have been taken by that State».

Although the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights also provides for inter-State complaints, these procedures apply only between States which have specifically recognized the relevant competence of the Human Rights Committee⁶⁸. In contrast, the procedure of the ICERD applies automatically to all States Parties.

As it reads now, Article 11 permits informal procedures: it does not even require, as does Article 41, paragraph 1(a), of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, that inter-State communications be written⁶⁹. Some Committee members have argued that such informality leads to the conclusion that, when States include inter-State information in their Article 9 reports, they automatically initiate Article 11 proceedings. In such a case, the Committee is required to transmit the communication to the State Party concerned.

Past Article 9 reports have contained various forms of disguised inter-State disputes⁷⁰. Several States have reported that part of their territory has been occupied by another State Party and that the latter is not giving effect to the provisions of the Convention. A series of reports by the Syrian Arab Republic have made such claims with respect to Israel's occupation of the Golan Heights. When Israel became a Party to the Convention, some Committee members refused to accept Syria's claim under Article 9⁷¹. However, Syria clearly was unwilling to initiate an Article 11 proceeding⁷². Though several of ICERD's members considered the serious information regarding Israeli racial discrimination acceptable under Article 9, on the basis of political, moral or ethical concerns, the Committee in this case did not table a draft decision to condemn Israel for its practices in the occupied territory. Recently, the Committee has slightly altered its policy as far as the occupied territories are concerned. In dealing with the report of Iraq, the Committee expressed its grave concern on the situation of citizens in the occupied territory of Kuwait. It was stated that Iraq was under an obligation to respect and to ensure to all individuals under its jurisdiction or control the rights recognized in ICERD⁷³. The same approach was then taken in respect of the territories occupied by Israel⁷⁴.

The practice of States Parties concerning inter-State complaints is unsatisfactory. When dealing with the reports of some States Parties bordering former Yugoslavia, the respective representatives have been asked by members of the Committee why no attempt has been made to initiate an appropriate procedure. The answer was evasive. Obviously there is a reluctance to resort to such a procedure, although it has been used under the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. Since States did not hesitate recently, in cases of grave and persistent violations of human rights, to involve the Security Council, the reluctance to use the inter-State complaint procedure cannot result from an excessive respect for the sovereignty of the States concerned.

Individual complaints

Within the United Nations human rights system three treaty-based procedures exist providing for the possibility for individuals to submit petitions directly to the respective supervisory committees. These are the optional Article 14 of ICERD, the Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and optional Article 22 of the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. The two former procedures require the specific acceptance of ten States and the latter of five States to become effective. Receiving these acceptances took much longer for Article 14 of ICERD than for the Protocol⁷⁵. Although the three procedures are similar, they are not fully identical.

Article 14 of ICERD differs from the Protocol and the Convention against Torture in that it provides that groups of individuals as well as individuals may present communications to the Committee. All the three procedures require the alleged victim to present to the Committee prima facie evidence of personal involvement, which excludes the procedure being used as actio popularis. However, the Human Rights Committee did agree to consider communications submitted «on behalf» of alleged victims by others, even without formal mandate or power of attorney, when it appeared that the victim was «unable to submit the communication himself»⁷⁶. In practice, the Human Rights Committee has accepted communications only from persons showing a close family connection with the alleged victim. According to Rule 91 of the Rules of Procedure, the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination is satisfied with communications submitted by the individual himself or by his relatives or designated representatives and, in exceptional cases, submitted by others when it appears that the victim is unable to submit the communication himself. The procedures under the Protocol and under the ICERD require as a condition of admissibility that all available domestic remedies be exhausted. Some case law exists in this respect from the Human Rights Committee indicating that extraordinary and ineffective remedies need not be employed⁷⁷. According to Article 14, paragraph 7(a), of ICERD, the principle does not apply where the application of remedies is unreasonably prolonged. Article 22, paragraph 5(b), of the Convention against Torture is even more liberal. All instruments contain clauses empowering the respective treaty bodies to reject complaints which are an abuse of the right to submit communications. In the case law of the Human Rights Committee, this verdict applies, for example, to repetitive complaints⁷⁸. Furthermore a communication may be declared inadmissible when it is not compatible with the provisions of the Convention⁷⁹. This clause is meant to exclude petitions invoking rights not granted by the relevant human rights instrument. However, this clause has been used in the Human Rights Committee to blur the distinction between the consideration of communications concerning their admissibility and their merits, thus introducing the concept of inadmissibility of a communication for being manifestly ill-founded⁸⁰.

⁷⁵ Tardu (Note 12) at p. 291 distinguishes between «complaint-procedure» and «complaint-information»; among the former belong those which require the competent organ to take a decision on admissibility (Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, Human Rights Committee, Committee Against Torture); among the latter, all those procedures which regard the complaint as information to identify human rights problems in general. UNESCO has created a complaint system of its own in 104 EX/Decision 3.3. of the Executive Board (1978).

The limited practice of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, however, has upheld this two-stage procedure and has objected to declaring a communication to be manifestly ill-founded and therefore inadmissible. After having found a communication admissible, the Human Rights Committee may consider the matter in the light of written information made available to it by the individual and by the State Party concerned, which excludes oral examination and cross-examination on written evidence. Under ICERD and under the Convention against Torture the respective Committees may request oral statements. Furthermore, these two Committees may request, through the Secretary-General, further information from United Nations bodies or the specialized agencies which may assist in the case⁸¹. The application of this rule may lead to a considerable enlargement of the evidence. The procedures in all the three cases conclude with a non-binding decision. Nevertheless the respective decisions have so far been very specific, leaving no doubt about the reasoning of the treaty body and how, in its view, the violation of the individual rights was most appropriately remedied.

Up to date the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination has received only four individual communications. A decision on the merits of the first was taken in 1988 and of the second in 1993.

The Committee decided that, in appropriate cases and with the consent of the parties concerned, it could decide to deal jointly with the question of admissibility and the merits of a communication. This would apply when the State Party does not raise objections as to admissibility and has already provided the necessary information and observations on the merits and the Committee is satisfied that the conditions for admissibility are met and that it already has before it all the necessary information to permit it to formulate its opinion on the merits of the communication.

As a consequence of the above modifications in its methods, the Committee adopted at its 977th meeting, on 16 March 1993, several changes in its Rules of Procedure⁸². The role of the Special Rapporteur is to review new communications, with a view to giving the necessary instructions to the Secretariat as to whether such communications should be forwarded to States Parties under Rule 92. Until a Special

Conclusions

The system of implementing international standards on prevention and elimination of racial discrimination has been considerably improved by the human rights treaty bodies over the years. However, it is doubtful whether further improvements are possible without completely altering the existing approach. This is especially true for the reporting system, the progressive development of which may have reached its inherent limits. Under this system, as it stands at present, the human rights treaty bodies have some possibility for fact-finding; however, they have no means of effectively reacting to established violations of international standards to match their fact-finding functions. It is even doubtful whether the establishment of such functions, de lege ferenda transforming the human rights treaty bodies more into court-like institutions, would enhance the implementation of international standards on prevention and elimination of racial discrimination. Such a transformation might curtail the willingness of States Parties to enter into a constructive dialogue with the human rights treaty bodies which are at the moment regarded as the prime means of the implementation system. The only option still open for consideration is the further development of the fact-finding capabilities of the human rights treaty bodies. This could be achieved by further pooling their information basis. The ultimate solution might be to merge the human rights treaty bodies into one or two institutions while at the same time transforming them into bodies which meet more often and for expanded periods.⁸³ This would, as a side effect, reduce the multiple and overlapping reporting obligations⁸⁴ of States Parties which are one of the reasons why the obligation to report is not met. Apart from this, the fact-finding capabilities of human rights treaty bodies could be enhanced if they had the right to send experts or a working group to a country. Such fact-finding could be co-ordinated with similar measures such as the «advisory services»⁸⁵.

Whereas the reporting system does not leave much room for innovative improvement, the significance of the individual complaint procedure for the implementation of the international standards on prevention and elimination of racial discrimination could be enhanced. Examining such individual complaints constitutes an important part of the work of the Human Rights Committee but not however of the other human rights treaty bodies. The situation will only improve if more States Parties accept the relevant procedure and the information on the availability of this procedure is disseminated more widely in the States Parties. For example, Ecuador, Peru and Uruguay have made a declaration recognizing the competence of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination under Article 14. However, no communication has yet been transmitted from these States Parties. This does not reflect the human rights situation prevailing in these States. Any enhancement concerning the individual complaint procedure is dependent upon the States Parties concerned; the treaty bodies can do little more than voice respective appeals.

It is doubtful whether the inter-State communication will ever play a significant role in implementing international human rights standards. There seems to exist a deep-rooted reluctance on the side of the States Parties to make use of that instrument. Hence it does not seem very productive to discuss possible improvements of this procedure⁸⁶.

All the three procedures mentioned so far suffer from one decisive shortcoming. They open the possibility for action of the respective treaty body only after human rights violations have occurred. However, and this is especially true for racial discrimination, violation of the international standards is often preceded by a build-up of tensions or prejudices. Although this is reflected in Article 7 of ICERD, it is possible to enhance the effectiveness of the human rights treaty bodies by providing them with or strengthening their existing preventive functions⁸⁷.

⁸⁵ See also Opsahl (Note 14), p. 440.

⁸⁶ Opsahl is equally sceptical (Note 14), p. 420.

⁸⁷ A/Res. 47/120 of 18 December 1992 emphasized the need for all organs and bodies of the United Nations to intensify their efforts to strengthen the Organization's role in preventive diplomacy. At their

That is where the major challenges lie for the future work of the human rights treaty bodies.

The Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination at its 42nd session adopted a paper on preventive action, including early warning and urgent procedures⁸⁸. Similar steps have been taken and even implemented by the Human Rights Committee, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Committee on the Rights of the Child.

Preventive actions of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination shall include early warning measures to address existing structural problems which might escalate into conflicts. Such a situation calling for early warning, in the view of the Committee, exists, inter alia, when the national implementation procedures are inadequate or when there exists a pattern of escalating racial hatred and violence or racist propaganda or appeals to racial intolerance by persons, groups or organizations, notably by elected or other officials. To formulate such early warning, the Committee must make full use of its sources of information and of its expert capacity to assess them. A further prerequisite for exercising such a function is that some members of the Committee overcome their aversion to involving themselves in matters which they still believe to belong to the internal affairs of the States Parties concerned. This is to accept that such actions be undertaken.

The criterion for initiating an urgent procedure, according to the decision of the Committee, is the presence of a pattern of massive or persistent racial discrimination.

fourth meeting, the chairpersons considered a suggestion by a member of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and a member of the Committee against Torture that they examine the possibility of undertaking preventive action against human rights violations, within the scope of the activities of the human rights treaty bodies. As a result of their consideration of this issue, the chairpersons concluded that, «... the treaty bodies have an important role in seeking to prevent as well as to respond to human rights violations. It is thus appropriate for each treaty body to undertake an urgent examination of all possible measures that it might take, within its competence, both to prevent human rights violations from occurring and to monitor more closely emergency situations of all kinds arising within the jurisdiction of States Parties. Where procedural innovations are required for this purpose, they should be considered as soon as possible.» (A/47/628, paragraph 44).

The reactions in its preventive function and in response to problems requiring immediate attention are similar, although under the early warning procedure the Committee will first exhaust its advisory functions vis-à-vis the respective State Party. The Committee may address its concern, along with recommendations for action, to all or any of the following: the State Party concerned; the Special Rapporteur established under Commission on Human Rights resolution 1993/20; the Secretary-General; and all other human rights bodies. The information addressed to the Secretary-General may in the case of urgent procedures include a recommendation to bring the matter to the attention of the Security Council. In the case of urgent procedures, the Committee may designate a Special Rapporteur.

This attempt to improve the functions of the Committee, as far as its response to serious, massive or persistent patterns of racial discrimination is concerned or the threat thereof, is very much influenced by the situation in the former Yugoslavia. It still remains to be seen whether it is possible to restructure the functions of the human rights treaty bodies in a way which will enable them to effectively respond to such or similar situations. If neither the human rights treaty bodies nor the Commission on Human Rights are vested with the power to exercise such functions effectively, the necessary measures will have to be taken by the Security Council.

(a) Within one year of the entry into force of the present Covenant for the States Parties concerned;

(b) Thereafter whenever the Committee so requests.

2. All reports shall be submitted to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit them to the Committee for consideration. Reports shall indicate the factors and difficulties, if any, affecting the implementation of the present Covenant.

3. The Secretary-General of the United Nations may, after consultation with the Committee, transmit to the specialized agencies concerned copies of such parts of the reports as may fall within their field of competence.

4. The Committee shall study the reports submitted by the States Parties to the present Covenant. It shall transmit its reports, and such general comments as it may consider appropriate, to the States Parties. The Committee may also transmit to the Economic and Social Council these comments along with the copies of the reports it has received from States Parties to the present Covenant.

5. The States Parties to the present Covenant may submit to the Committee observations on any comments that may be made in accordance with paragraph 4 of this article.

Article 41

1. A State Party to the present Covenant may at any time declare under this article that it recognizes the competence of the Committee to receive and consider communications to the effect that a State Party claims that another State Party is not fulfilling its obligations under the present Covenant. Communications under this article may be received and considered only if submitted by a State Party which has made a declaration recognizing in regard to itself the competence of the Committee. No communication shall be received by the Committee if it concerns a State Party which has not made such a declaration. Communications received under this article shall be dealt with in accordance with the following procedure:

(a) If a State Party to the present Covenant considers that another State Party is not giving effect to the provisions of the present Covenant, it may, by written communication, bring the matter to the attention of that State Party. Within three months after the receipt of the communication the receiving State shall afford the State which sent the communication an explanation, or any other statement in writing clarifying the matter which should include, to the extent possible and pertinent reference to domestic procedures and remedies taken, pending, or available in the matter;

(b) If the matter is not adjusted to the satisfaction of both States Parties concerned within six months after the receipt by the receiving State of the initial communication, either State shall have the right to refer the matter to the Committee, by notice given to the Committee and to the other State;

(c) The Committee shall deal with a matter referred to it only after it has ascertained that all available domestic remedies have been invoked and exhausted in the matter, in conformity with the generally recognized principles of international law. This shall not be the rule where the application of the remedies is unreasonably prolonged;

(d) The Committee shall hold closed meetings when examining communications under this article;

(e) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (c), the Committee shall make available its good offices to the States Parties concerned with a view to a friendly solution of the matter on the basis of respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms as recognized in the present Covenant;

(f) In any matter referred to it, the Committee may call upon the States Parties concerned, referred to in subparagraph (b), to supply any relevant information;

Such declarations shall be deposited by the States Parties with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the other States Parties. A declaration may be withdrawn at any time by notification to the Secretary-General. Such a withdrawal shall not prejudice the consideration of any matter which is the subject of a communication already transmitted under this article; no further communication by any State Party shall be received after the notification of withdrawal of the declaration has been received by the Secretary-General, unless the State Party concerned has made a new declaration.

Article 42

1. (a) If a matter referred to the Committee in accordance with article 41 is not resolved to the satisfaction of the States Parties concerned, the Committee may, with the prior consent of the States Parties concerned, appoint an ad hoc Conciliation Commission (hereinafter referred to as the Commission). The good offices of the Commission shall be made available to the States Parties concerned with a view to an amicable solution of the matter on the basis of respect for the present Covenant;

(b) The Commission shall consist of five persons acceptable to the States Parties concerned. If the States Parties concerned fail to reach agreement within three months on all or part of the composition of the Commission, the members of the Commission concerning whom no agreement has been reached shall be elected by secret ballot by a two-thirds majority vote of the Committee from among its members.

2. The members of the Commission shall serve in their personal capacity. They shall not be nationals of the States Parties concerned, or of a State not Party to the present Covenant, or of a State Party which has not made a declaration under article 41.

3. The Commission shall elect its own Chairman and adopt its own rules of procedure.

This report shall also contain the written submissions and a record of the oral submissions made by the States Parties concerned;

8. The provisions of this article are without prejudice to the responsibilities of the Committee under article 41.
9. The States Parties concerned shall share equally all the expenses of the members of the Commission in accordance with estimates to be provided by the Secretary-General of the United Nations.
10. The Secretary-General of the United Nations shall be empowered to pay the expenses of the members of the Commission, if necessary, before reimbursement by the States Parties concerned, in accordance with paragraph 9 of this article.

Nations as laid down in the relevant sections of the Convention on the Privileges and Immunities of the United Nations.

Article 44

The provisions for the implementation of the present Covenant shall apply without prejudice to the procedures prescribed in the field of human rights by or under the constituent instruments and the conventions of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies and shall not prevent the States Parties to the present Covenant from having recourse to other procedures for settling a dispute in accordance with general or special international agreements in force between them.

PART III

INSTRUMENTS AGAINST DISCRIMINATION

A. United Nations

1. United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

Proclaimed by General Assembly resolution 1904 (XVIII) of 20 November 1963

The General Assembly,

Considering that the Charter of the United Nations is based on the principles of the dignity and equality of all human beings and seeks, among other basic objectives, to achieve international co-operation in promoting and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out in the Declaration, without distinction of any kind, in particular as to race, colour or national origin,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims further that all are equal before the law and are entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law and that all are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination and against any incitement to such discrimination,

Considering that the United Nations has condemned colonialism and all practices of segregation and discrimination associated therewith, and that the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples proclaims in particular the necessity of bringing colonialism to a speedy and unconditional end,

Considering that any doctrine of racial differentiation or superiority is scientifically false, morally condemnable, socially unjust and dangerous, and that there is no justification for racial discrimination either in theory or in practice,

Taking into account the other resolutions adopted by the General Assembly and the international instruments adopted by the specialized agencies, in particular the International Labour Organisation and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, in the field of discrimination,

Taking into account the fact that, although international action and efforts in a number of countries have made it possible to achieve progress in that field, discrimination based on race, colour or ethnic origin in certain areas of the world continues none the less to give cause for serious concern,

Alarmed by the manifestations of racial discrimination still in evidence in some areas of the world, some of which are imposed by certain Governments by means of legislative, administrative or other measures, in the form, inter alia, of apartheid, segregation and separation, as well as by the promotion and dissemination of doctrines of racial superiority and expansionism in certain areas,

Convinced that all forms of racial discrimination and, still more so, governmental policies based on the prejudice of racial superiority or on racial hatred, besides constituting a violation of fundamental human rights, tend to jeopardize friendly relations among peoples, co-operation between nations and international peace and security, Convinced also that racial discrimination harms not only those who are its objects but also those who practise it.

Convinced further that the building of a world society free from all forms of racial segregation and discrimination, factors which create hatred and division among men, is one of the fundamental objectives of the United Nations,

1. Solemnly affirms the necessity of speedily eliminating racial discrimination throughout the world, in all its forms and manifestations, and of securing understanding of and respect for the dignity of the human person;
2. Solemnly affirms the necessity of adopting national and international measures to that end, including teaching, education and information, in order to secure the universal and effective recognition and observance of the principles set forth below;
3. Proclaims this Declaration:

Article 1

Discrimination between human beings on the ground of race, colour or ethnic origin is an offence to human dignity and shall be condemned as a denial of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, as a violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as an obstacle to friendly and peaceful relations among nations and as a fact capable of disturbing peace and security among peoples.

Article 2

1. No State, institution, group or individual shall make any discrimination whatsoever in matters of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the treatment of persons, groups of persons or institutions on the ground of race, colour or ethnic origin.

2. No State shall encourage, advocate or lend its support, through police action or otherwise, to any discrimination based on race, colour or ethnic origin by any group, institution or individual.

3. Special concrete measures shall be taken in appropriate circumstances in order to secure adequate development or protection of individuals belonging to certain racial groups with the object of ensuring the full enjoyment by such individuals of human rights and fundamental freedoms. These measures shall in no circumstances have as a consequence the maintenance of unequal or separate rights for different racial groups.

Article 3

1. Particular efforts shall be made to prevent discrimination based on race, colour or ethnic origin, especially in the fields of civil rights, access to citizenship, education, religion, employment, occupation and housing.

2. Everyone shall have equal access to any place or facility intended for use by the general public, without distinction as to race, colour or ethnic origin.

Article 4

All States shall take effective measures to revise governmental and other public policies and to rescind laws and regulations which have the effect of creating and perpetuating racial discrimination wherever it still exists. They should pass legislation for prohibiting such discrimination and should take all appropriate measures to combat those prejudices which lead to racial discrimination.

Article 5

An end shall be put without delay to governmental and other public policies of racial segregation and especially policies of apartheid, as well as all forms of racial discrimination and separation resulting from such policies.

Article 6

No discrimination by reason of race, colour or ethnic origin shall be admitted in the enjoyment by any person of political and citizenship rights in his country, in particular the right to participate in elections through universal and equal suffrage and to take part in the government. Everyone has the right of equal access to public service in his country.

Article 7

1. Everyone has the right to equality before the law and to equal justice under the law. Everyone, without distinction as to race, colour or ethnic origin, has the right to security of person and protection by the State against violence or bodily harm, whether inflicted by government officials or by any individual, group or institution.
2. Everyone shall have the right to an effective remedy and protection against any discrimination he may suffer on the ground of race, colour or ethnic origin with respect to his fundamental rights and freedoms through independent national tribunals competent to deal with such matters.

Article 8

All effective steps shall be taken immediately in the fields of teaching, education and information, with a view to eliminating racial discrimination and prejudice and promoting understanding, tolerance and friendship among nations and racial groups, as well as to propagating the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations, of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and of the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

Article 9

1. All propaganda and organizations based on ideas or theories of the superiority of one race or group of persons of one colour or ethnic origin with a view to justifying or promoting racial discrimination in any form shall be severely condemned.
2. All incitement to or acts of violence, whether by individuals or organizations against any race or group of persons of another colour or ethnic origin shall be considered an offence against society and punishable under law.
3. In order to put into effect the purposes and principles of the present Declaration, all States shall take immediate and positive measures, including legislative and other measures, to prosecute and/or outlaw organizations which promote or incite to racial discrimination, or incite to or use violence for purposes of discrimination based on race, colour or ethnic origin.

Article 10

The United Nations, the specialized agencies, States and non-governmental organizations shall do all in their power to promote energetic action which, by combining legal and other practical measures, will make possible the abolition of all forms of racial discrimination. They shall, in particular, study the causes of such discrimination with a view to recommending appropriate and effective measures to combat and eliminate it.

Article 11

Every State shall promote respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations and shall fully and faithfully observe the provisions of the present Declaration, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples.

2. International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination

Adopted and opened for signature and ratification by General Assembly resolution 2106A (XX) of 21 December 1965

ENTRY INTO FORCE: 4 January 1969, in accordance with article 19

The States Parties to this Convention,

Considering that the Charter of the United Nations is based on the principles of the dignity and equality inherent in all human beings, and that all Member States have pledged themselves to take joint and separate action, in co-operation with the Organization, for the achievement of one of the purposes of the United Nations which is to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set out therein, without distinction of any kind, in particular as to race, colour or national origin,

Considering that all human beings are equal before the law and are entitled to equal protection of the law against any discrimination and against any incitement to discrimination,

Considering that the United Nations has condemned colonialism and all practices of segregation and discrimination associated therewith, in whatever form and wherever they exist, and that the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples of 14 December 1960 (General Assembly resolution 1514 (XV)) has affirmed and solemnly proclaimed the necessity of bringing them to a speedy and unconditional end,

Considering that the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination of 20 November 1963 (General Assembly resolution 1904 (XVIII)) solemnly affirms the necessity of speedily eliminating racial discrimination throughout the world in all its forms and manifestations and of securing understanding of and respect for the dignity of the human person,

Convinced that any doctrine of superiority based on racial differentiation is scientifically false, morally condemnable, socially unjust and dangerous, and that there is no justification for racial discrimination, in theory or in practice, anywhere,

Reaffirming that discrimination between human beings on the grounds of race, colour or ethnic origin is an obstacle to friendly and peaceful relations among nations and is capable of disturbing peace and security

among peoples and the harmony of persons living side by side even within one and the same State,

Convinced that the existence of racial barriers is repugnant to the ideals of any human society,

Alarmed by manifestations of racial discrimination still in evidence in some areas of the world and by governmental policies based on racial superiority or hatred, such as policies of apartheid, segregation or separation,

Resolved to adopt all necessary measures for speedily eliminating racial discrimination in all its forms and manifestations, and to prevent and combat racist doctrines and practices in order to promote understanding between races and to build an international community free from all forms of racial segregation and racial discrimination,

Bearing in mind the Convention concerning Discrimination in respect of Employment and Occupation adopted by the International Labour Organisation in 1958, and the Convention against Discrimination in Education adopted by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization in 1960,

Desiring to implement the principles embodied in the United Nations Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination and to secure the earliest adoption of practical measures to that end,

Have agreed as follows:

PART I

Article 1

1. In this Convention, the term «racial discrimination» shall mean any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on race, colour, descent, or national or ethnic origin which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise, on an equal footing, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural or any other field of public life.
2. This Convention shall not apply to distinctions, exclusions, restrictions or preferences made by a State Party to this Convention between citizens and non-citizens.
3. Nothing in this Convention may be interpreted as affecting in any way the legal provisions of States Parties concerning nationality, citizenship or naturalization, provided that such provisions do not discriminate against any particular nationality.

4. Special measures taken for the sole purpose of securing adequate advancement of certain racial or ethnic groups or individuals requiring such protection as may be necessary in order to ensure such groups or individuals equal enjoyment or exercise of human rights and fundamental freedoms shall not be deemed racial discrimination, provided, however, that such measures do not, as a consequence, lead to the maintenance of separate rights for different racial groups and that they shall not be continued after the objectives for which they were taken have been achieved.

Article 2

1. States Parties condemn racial discrimination and undertake to pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating racial discrimination in all its forms and promoting understanding among all races, and, to this end:

(a) Each State Party undertakes to engage in no act or practice of racial discrimination against persons, groups of persons or institutions and to ensure that all public authorities and public institutions, national and local, shall act in conformity with this obligation;

(b) Each State Party undertakes not to sponsor, defend or support racial discrimination by any persons or organizations;

(c) Each State Party shall take effective measures to review governmental, national and local policies, and to amend, rescind or nullify any laws and regulations which have the effect of creating or perpetuating racial discrimination wherever it exists;

(d) Each State Party shall prohibit and bring to an end, by all appropriate means, including legislation as required by circumstances, racial discrimination by any persons, group or organization;

(e) Each State Party undertakes to encourage, where appropriate, integrationist multiracial organizations and movements and other means of eliminating barriers between races, and to discourage anything which tends to strengthen racial division.

2. States Parties shall, when the circumstances so warrant, take, in the social, economic, cultural and other fields, special and concrete measures to ensure the adequate development and protection of certain racial groups or individuals belonging to them, for the purpose of guaranteeing them the full and equal enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms. These measures shall in no case entail as a consequence the maintenance of unequal or separate rights for different racial groups after the objectives for which they were taken have been achieved.

Article 3

States Parties particularly condemn racial segregation and apartheid and undertake to prevent, prohibit and eradicate all practices of this nature in territories under their jurisdiction.

Article 4

States Parties condemn all propaganda and all organizations which are based on ideas or theories of superiority of one race or group of persons of one colour or ethnic origin, or which attempt to justify or promote racial hatred and discrimination in any form, and undertake to adopt immediate and positive measures designed to eradicate all incitement to, or acts of, such discrimination and, to this end, with due regard to the principles embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the rights expressly set forth in article 5 of this Convention, inter alia:

(a) Shall declare an offence punishable by law all dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or hatred, incitement to racial discrimination, as well as all acts of violence or incitement to such acts against any race or group of persons of another colour or ethnic origin, and also the provision of any assistance to racist activities, including the financing thereof;

(b) Shall declare illegal and prohibit organizations, and also organized and all other propaganda activities, which promote and incite racial discrimination, and shall recognize participation in such organizations or activities as an offence punishable by law;

(c) Shall not permit public authorities or public institutions, national or local, to promote or incite racial discrimination.

Article 5

Considering the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which states that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in the Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour or national origin,

Considering the Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples, in which the General Assembly stated that the process of liberation is irresistible and irreversible and that, in the interests of human dignity, progress and justice, an end must be put to colonialism and all practices of segregation and discrimination associated therewith.

Observing that, in accordance with the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, States particularly condemn racial segregation and apartheid and undertake to prevent, prohibit and eradicate all practices of this nature in territories under their jurisdiction,

Observing that, in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, certain acts which may also be qualified as acts of apartheid constitute a crime under international law,

(f) Persecution of organizations and persons, by depriving them of fundamental rights and freedoms, because they oppose apartheid.

Article III

International criminal responsibility shall apply, irrespective of the motive involved, to individuals, members of organizations and institutions and representatives of the State, whether residing in the territory of the State in which the acts are perpetrated or in some other State, whenever they:

4. International Convention against Apartheid in Sports

Adopted and opened for signature and ratification by General Assembly resolution 40/64 of 10 December 1985

The States Parties to the present Convention,

Recalling the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, in which all Members pledged themselves to take joint and separate action, in cooperation with the Organization, for the achievement of universal respect for and observance of, human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in the Declaration without distinction of any kind, particularly in regard to race, colour or national origin,

Observing that, in accordance with the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, States Parties to that Convention particularly condemn racial segregation and apartheid and undertake to prevent, prohibit and eradicate all practices of this nature in all fields,

Observing that the General Assembly of the United Nations has adopted a number of resolutions condemning the practice of apartheid in sports and has affirmed its unqualified support for the Olympic principle that no discrimination be allowed on the grounds of race, religion or political affiliation and that merit should be the sole criterion for participation in sports activities.

Considering that the International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports, which was adopted by the General Assembly on 14 December 1977, solemnly affirms the necessity for the speedy elimination of apartheid in sports, Recalling the provisions of the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and recognizing, in particular, that participation in sports exchanges with teams selected on the basis of apartheid directly abets and encourages the commission of the crime of apartheid, as defined in that Convention.

Resolved to adopt all necessary measures to eradicate the practice of apartheid in sports and to promote international sports contacts based on the Olympic principle,

Recognizing that sports contact with any country practising apartheid in sports condones and strengthens apartheid in violation of the Olympic principle and thereby becomes the legitimate concern of all Governments,

Desiring to implement the principles embodied in the International Declaration against Apartheid in Sports and to secure the earliest adoption of practical measures to that end,

Convinced that the adoption of an International Convention against Apartheid in Sports would result in more effective measures at the international and national levels, with a view to eliminating apartheid in sports,

Have agreed as follows:

Article 1

For the purposes of the present Convention:

(a) The expression «apartheid» shall mean a system of institutionalized racial segregation and discrimination for the purpose of establishing and maintaining domination by one racial group of persons over another racial group of persons and systematically oppressing them, such as that pursued by South Africa, and «apartheid in sports» shall mean the application of the policies and practices of such a system in sports activities, whether organized on a professional or an amateur basis;

(b) The expression «national sports facilities» shall mean any sports facility operated within the framework of a sports programme conducted under the auspices of a national government;

(c) The expression «Olympic principle» shall mean the principle that no discrimination be allowed on the grounds of race, religion or political affiliation;

(d) The expression «sports contracts» shall mean any contract concluded for the organization, promotion, performance or derivative rights, including servicing, of any sports activity;

(e) The expression «sports bodies» shall mean any organization constituted to organize sports activities at the national level, including national Olympic committees, national sports federations or national governing sports committees;

(f) The expression «team» shall mean a group of sportsmen organized for the purpose of participating in sports activities in competition with other such organized groups;

(g) The expression «sportsmen» shall mean men and women who participate in sports activities on an individual or team basis, as well as managers, coaches, trainers and other officials whose functions are essential for the operation of a team.

Article 2

States Parties strongly condemn apartheid and undertake to pursue immediately by all appropriate means the policy of eliminating the practice of apartheid in all its forms from sports.

Article 3

5. Declaration on the Elimination of All Forms of Intolerance and of Discrimination Based on Religion or Belief

Proclaimed by General Assembly resolution 36/55 of 25 November 1981

The General Assembly,

Considering that one of the basic principles of the Charter of the United Nations is that of the dignity and equality inherent in all human beings, and that all Member States have pledged themselves to take joint and separate action in co-operation with the Organization to promote and encourage universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights proclaim the principles of non-discrimination and equality before the law and the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion and belief,

Considering that the disregard and infringement of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in particular of the right to freedom of thought, conscience, religion or whatever belief, have brought, directly or indirectly, wars and great suffering to mankind, especially where they serve as a means of foreign interference in the internal affairs of other States and amount to kindling hatred between peoples and nations,

Considering that religion or belief, for anyone who professes either, is one of the fundamental elements in his conception of life and that freedom of religion or belief should be fully respected and guaranteed,

Considering that it is essential to promote understanding, tolerance and respect in matters relating to freedom of religion and belief and to ensure that the use of religion or belief for ends inconsistent with the Charter of the United Nations, other relevant instruments of the United Nations and the purposes and principles of the present Declaration is inadmissible,

Convinced that freedom of religion and belief should also contribute to the attainment of the goals of world peace, social justice and friendship among peoples and to the elimination of ideologies or practices of colonialism and racial discrimination,

Noting with satisfaction the adoption of several, and the coming into force of some, conventions, under the aegis of the United Nations and of the specialized agencies, for the elimination of various forms of discrimination,

Concerned by manifestations of intolerance and by the existence of discrimination in matters of religion or belief still in evidence in some areas of the world,

2. No one shall be subject to coercion which would impair his freedom to have a religion or belief of his choice.

Article 3

Discrimination between human being on the grounds of religion or belief constitutes an affront to human dignity and a disavowal of the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, and shall be condemned as a violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and enunciated in detail in the International Covenants on Human Rights, and as an obstacle to friendly and peaceful relations between nations.

Article 4

1. All States shall take effective measures to prevent and eliminate discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief in the recognition, exercise and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms in all fields of civil, economic, political, social and cultural life.

3. The child shall be protected from any form of discrimination on the ground of religion or belief. He shall be brought up in a spirit of understanding, tolerance, friendship among peoples, peace and universal brotherhood, respect for freedom of religion or belief of others, and in full consciousness that his energy and talents should be devoted to the service of his fellow men.

4. In the case of a child who is not under the care either of his parents or of legal guardians, due account shall be taken of their expressed wishes or of any other proof of their wishes in the matter of religion or belief, the best interests of the child being the guiding principle.

Article 8

Nothing in the present Declaration shall be construed as restricting or derogating from any right defined in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Human Rights.

7. Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women

Proclaimed by General Assembly resolution 2263 (XXII) of 7 November 1967

The General Assembly,

Considering that the peoples of the United Nations have, in the Charter, reaffirmed their faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women,

Considering that the Universal Declaration on Human Rights asserts the principle of non-discrimination and proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth therein without distinction of any kind, including any distinction as to sex,

Considering that discrimination against women is incompatible with human dignity and with the welfare of the family and of society, prevents their participation, on equal terms with men, in the political, social, economic and cultural life of their countries and is an obstacle to the full development of the potentialities of women in the service of their countries and of humanity,

Bearing in mind the great contribution made by women to social, political, economic and cultural life and the part they play in the family and particularly in the rearing of children,

Convinced that the full and complete development of a country, the welfare of the world and the cause of peace require the maximum participation of women as well as men in all fields,

8. Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women

Adopted and opened for signature, ratification and accession by General Assembly resolution 34/180 of 18 December 1979

ENTRY INTO FORCE: 3 September 1981, in accordance with article 27 (1)

The States Parties to the present Convention,

Noting that the Charter of the United Nations reaffirms faith in fundamental human rights, in the dignity and worth of the human person and in the equal rights of men and women,

Noting that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights affirms the principle of the inadmissibility of discrimination and proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth therein, without distinction of any kind, including distinction based on sex,

Noting that the States Parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights have the obligation to ensure the equal rights of men and women to enjoy all economic, social, cultural, civil and political rights,

Considering the international conventions concluded under the auspices of the United Nations and the specialized agencies promoting equality of rights of men and women,

Noting also the resolutions, declarations and recommendations adopted by the United Nations and the specialized agencies promoting equality of rights of men and women,

Concerned, however, that despite these various instruments extensive discrimination against women continues to exist,

Recalling that discrimination against women violates the principles of equality of rights and respect for human dignity, is an obstacle to the participation of women, on equal terms with men, in the political, social, economic and cultural life of their countries, hampers the growth of the prosperity of society and the family and makes more difficult the full development of the potentialities of women in the service of their countries and of humanity,

Concerned that in situations of poverty women have the least access to food, health, education, training and opportunities for employment and other needs,

Convinced that the establishment of the new international economic order based on equity and justice will contribute significantly towards the promotion of equality between men and women,

Emphasizing that the eradication of apartheid, all forms of racism, racial discrimination, colonialism, neo-colonialism, aggression, foreign occupation and domination and interference in the internal affairs of States is essential to the full enjoyment of the rights of men and women,

Affirming that the strengthening of international peace and security, the relaxation of international tension, mutual co-operation among all States irrespective of their social and economic systems, general and complete disarmament, in particular nuclear disarmament under strict and effective international control, the affirmation of the principles of justice, equality and mutual benefit in relations among countries and the realization of the right of peoples under alien and colonial domination and foreign occupation to self-determination and independence, as well as respect for national sovereignty and territorial integrity, will promote social progress and development and as a consequence will contribute to the attainment of full equality between men and women,

Convinced that the full and complete development of a country, the welfare of the world and the cause of peace require the maximum participation of women on equal terms with men in all fields,

Bearing in mind the great contribution of women to the welfare of the family and to the development of society; so far not fully recognized, the social significance of maternity and the role of both parents in the family and in the upbringing of children, and aware that the role of women in procreation should not be a basis for discrimination but that the upbringing of children requires a sharing of responsibility between men and women and society as a whole,

Aware that a change in the traditional role of men as well as the role of women in society and in the family is needed to achieve full equality between men and women,

Determined to implement the principles set forth in the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and, for that purpose, to adopt the measures required for the elimination of such discrimination in all its forms and manifestations,

Having agreed on the following:

PART I

Article 1

For the purposes of the present Convention, the term «discrimination against women» shall mean any distinction, exclusion or restriction made on the basis of sex which has the effect or purpose of impairing or nullifying the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by women, irrespective of their marital status, on a basis of equality of men and women, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural, civil or any other field.

Article 2

States Parties condemn discrimination against women in all its forms, agree to pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating discrimination against women and, to this end, undertake:

(e) To take all appropriate measures to eliminate discrimination against women by any person, organization or enterprise;

(f) To take all appropriate measures, including legislation, to modify or abolish existing laws, regulations, customs and practices which constitute discrimination against women;

(g) To repeal all national penal provisions which constitute discrimination against women.

Article 3

States Parties shall take in all fields, in particular in the political, social, economic and cultural fields, all appropriate measures, including legislation, to ensure the full development and advancement of women, for the purpose of guaranteeing them the exercise and enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms on a basis of equality with men.

Article 4

1. 9. Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women

Proclaimed by General Assembly resolution 48/104 of 20 December 1993

The General Assembly,

Recognizing the urgent need for the universal application to women of the rights and principles with regard to equality, security, liberty, integrity and dignity of all human beings,

Noting that those rights and principles are enshrined in international instruments, including the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic Social and Cultural Rights, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment,

Recognizing that effective implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women would contribute to the elimination of violence against women and that the Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, set forth in the present resolution, will strengthen and complement that process.

Concerned that violence against women is an obstacle to the achievement of equality, development and peace, as recognized in the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women, in which a set of measures to combat violence against women was recommended, and to the full implementation of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

Affirming that violence against women constitutes a violation of the rights and fundamental freedoms of women and impairs or nullifies their enjoyment of those rights and freedoms, and concerned about the long-standing failure to protect and promote those rights and freedoms in the case of violence against women,

Recognizing that violence against women is a manifestation of historically unequal power relations between men and women, which have led to domination over and discrimination against women by men and to the prevention of the full advancement of women, and that violence against women is one of the crucial social mechanisms by which women are forced into a subordinate position compared with men,

Concerned that some groups of women, such as women belonging to minority groups, indigenous women, refugee women, migrant women, women living in rural or remote communities, destitute women, women in institutions or in detention, female children, women with disabilities, elderly women and women in situations of armed conflict, are especially vulnerable to violence.

Recalling the conclusion in paragraph 23 of the annex to Economic and Social Council resolution 1990/15 of 24 May 1990 that the recognition that violence against women in the family and society was pervasive and cut across lines of income, class and culture had to be matched by urgent and effective steps to eliminate its incidence,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1991/18 of 30 May 1991, in which the Council recommended the development of a framework for an international instrument that would address explicitly the issue of violence against women.

Welcoming the role that women's movements are playing in drawing increasing attention to the nature, severity and magnitude of the problem of violence against women,

Alarmed that opportunities for women to achieve legal, social, political and economic equality in society are limited, inter alia, by continuing and endemic violence,

Convinced that in the light of the above there is a need for a clear and comprehensive definition of violence against women, a clear statement of the rights to be applied to ensure the elimination of violence against women in all its forms, a commitment by States in respect of their responsibilities, and a commitment by the international community at large to the elimination of violence against women,

Solemnly proclaims the following Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women and urges that every effort be made so that it becomes generally known and respected:

Article 1

For the purposes of this Declaration, the term «violence against women» means any act of gender-based violence that results in, or is likely to result in, physical, sexual or psychological harm or suffering to women, including threats of such acts, coercion or arbitrary deprivation of liberty, whether occurring in public or in private life.

- (c) Physical, sexual and psychological violence perpetrated or condoned by the State wherever it occurs.

Article 4

States should condemn violence against women and should not invoke any custom, tradition or religious consideration to avoid their obligations with respect to its elimination. States should pursue by all appropriate means and without delay a policy of eliminating violence against women and, to this end, should:

- (a) Consider, where they have not yet done so, ratifying or acceding to the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women or withdrawing reservations to that Convention;

- (e) Consider the possibility of developing national plans of action to promote the protection of women against any form of violence, or to include provisions for that purpose in plans already existing, taking into account, as appropriate, such co-operation as can be provided by non-governmental organizations, particularly those concerned with the issue of violence against women;
- (f) Develop, in a comprehensive way, preventive approaches and all those measures of a legal, political, administrative and cultural nature that promote the protection of women against any form of violence, and ensure that the re-victimization of women does not occur because of laws insensitive to gender considerations, enforcement practices or other interventions;
- (g) Work to ensure, to the maximum extent feasible in the light of their available resources and, where needed, within the framework of international co-operation, that women subjected to violence and, where appropriate, their children have specialized assistance, such as rehabilitation, assistance in child care and maintenance, treatment, counselling, and health and social services, facilities and programmes, as well as support structures, and should take all other appropriate measures to promote their safety and physical and psychological rehabilitation;
- (h) Include in government budgets adequate resources for their activities related to the elimination of violence against women;
- (i) Take measures to ensure that law enforcement officers and public officials responsible for implementing policies to prevent, investigate and punish violence against women receive training to sensitize them to the needs of women;
- (j) Adopt all appropriate measures, especially in the field of education, to modify the social and cultural patterns of conduct of men and women and to eliminate prejudices, customary practices and all other practices based on the idea of the inferiority or superiority of either of the sexes and on stereotyped roles for men and women;

- (k) Promote research, collect data and compile statistics, especially concerning domestic violence, relating to the prevalence of different forms of violence against women and encourage research on the causes, nature, seriousness and consequences of violence against women and on the effectiveness of measures implemented to prevent and redress violence against women; those statistics and findings of the research will be made public;
- (l) Adopt measures directed towards the elimination of violence against women who are especially vulnerable to violence;
- (m) Include, in submitting reports as required under relevant human rights instruments of the United Nations, information pertaining to violence against women and measures taken to implement the present Declaration;

- (q) Encourage intergovernmental regional organizations of which they are members to include the elimination of violence against women in their programmes, as appropriate.

Article 5

The organs and specialized agencies of the United Nations system should, within their respective fields of competence, contribute to the recognition and realization of the rights and the principles set forth in the present Declaration and, to this end, should, inter alia:

In particular, States shall fulfil in good faith the obligations and commitments they have assumed under international treaties and agreements to which they are parties.

2. The exercise of the rights set forth in the present Declaration shall not prejudice the enjoyment by all persons of universally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms.

3. Measures taken by States to ensure the effective enjoyment of the rights set forth in the present Declaration shall not prima facie be considered contrary to the principle of equality contained in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

4. Nothing in the present Declaration may be construed as permitting any activity contrary to the purposes and principles of the United Nations, including sovereign equality, territorial integrity and political independence of States.

11. Declaration on the Human Rights of Individuals Who are not Nationals of the Country in which They Live

Adopted by General Assembly resolution 40/144 of 13 December 1985

The General Assembly,

Considering that the Charter of the United Nations encourages universal respect for and observance of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all human beings, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights and that everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in that Declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Considering that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights proclaims further that everyone has the right to recognition everywhere as a person before the law, that all are equal before the law and entitled without any discrimination to equal protection of the law, and that all are entitled to equal protection against any discrimination in violation of that Declaration and against any incitement to such discrimination,

Being aware that the States Parties to the International Covenants on Human Rights undertake to guarantee that the rights enunciated in these Covenants will be exercised without discrimination of any kind as to race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Conscious that, with improving communications and the development of peaceful and friendly relations among countries, individuals increasingly live in countries of which they are not nationals,

Reaffirming the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Recognizing that the protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms provided for in international instruments should also be ensured for individuals who are not nationals of the country in which they live,

Proclaims this Declaration,

Article 1

For the purposes of this Declaration, the term "alien" shall apply, with due regard to qualifications made in subsequent articles, to any individual who is not a national of the State in which he or she is present.

Article 2

1. Nothing in this Declaration shall be interpreted as legitimizing the illegal entry into and presence in a State of any alien, nor shall any provision be interpreted as restricting the right of any State to promulgate laws and regulations concerning the entry of aliens and the terms and conditions of their stay or to establish differences between nationals and aliens. However, such laws and regulations shall not be incompatible with the international legal obligations of that State, including those in the field of human rights.

2. This Declaration shall not prejudice the enjoyment of the rights accorded by domestic law and of the rights which under international law a State is obliged to accord to aliens, even where this Declaration does not recognize such rights or recognizes them to a lesser extent.

Article 3

Every State shall make public its national legislation or regulations affecting aliens.

Article 4

Aliens shall observe the laws of the State in which they reside or are present and regard with respect the customs and traditions of the people of that State.

Article 5

1. Aliens shall enjoy, in accordance with domestic law and subject to the relevant international obligation of the State in which they are present, in particular the following rights:

(a) The right to life and security of person; no alien shall be subjected to arbitrary arrest or detention; no alien shall be deprived of his or her liberty except on such grounds and in accordance with such procedures as are established by law;

(b) The right to protection against arbitrary or unlawful interference with privacy, family home or correspondence;

(c) The right to be equal before the courts, tribunals and all other organs and authorities administering justice and, when necessary, to free assistance of an interpreter in criminal proceedings and, when prescribed by law, other proceedings;

- (d) The right to choose a spouse, to marry, to found a family;
- (e) The right to freedom of thought, opinion, conscience and religion; the right to manifest their religion or beliefs, subject only to such limitations as are prescribed by law and are necessary to protect public safety, order, health or morals or the fundamental rights and freedoms of others;
- (f) The right to retain their own language, culture and tradition;
- (g) The right to transfer abroad earnings, savings or other personal monetary assets, subject to domestic currency regulations.

2. Subject to such restrictions as are prescribed by law and which are necessary in a democratic society to protect national security, public safety, public order, public health or morals or the rights and freedoms of others, and which are consistent with the other rights recognized in the relevant international instruments and those set forth in this Declaration, aliens shall enjoy the following rights:

- (a) The right to leave the country;
- (b) The right to freedom of expression;
- (c) The right to peaceful assembly;
- (d) The right to own property alone as well as in association with others, subject to domestic law.

3. Subject to the provisions referred to in paragraph 2, aliens lawfully in the territory of a State shall enjoy the right to liberty of movement and freedom to choose their residence within the borders of the State.

Article 6

No alien shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment and, in particular, no alien shall be subjected without his or her free consent to medical or scientific experimentation.

Article 7

An alien lawfully in the territory of a State may be expelled therefrom only in pursuance of a decision reached in accordance with law and shall, except where compelling reasons of national security otherwise require, be allowed to submit the reasons why he or she should not be expelled and to have the case reviewed by, and be represented for the purpose before, the competent authority or a person or persons specially designated by the competent authority. Individual or collective expulsion of such aliens on grounds of race, colour, religion, culture, descent or national or ethnic origin is prohibited.

Article 8

1. Aliens lawfully residing in the territory of a State shall also enjoy, in accordance with the national laws, the following rights, subject to their obligations under article 4:

(a) The right to safe and healthy working conditions, to fair wages and equal remuneration for work of equal value without distinction of any kind, in particular, women being guaranteed conditions of work not inferior to those enjoyed by men, with equal pay for equal work;

(b) The right to join trade unions and other organizations or associations of their choice and to participate in their activities. No restrictions may be placed on the exercise of this right other than those prescribed by law and which are necessary, in a democratic society, in the interests of national security or public order or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others;

(c) The right to health protection, medical care, social security, social services, education, rest and leisure, provided that they fulfil the requirements under the relevant regulations for participation and that undue strain is not placed on the resources of the State.

2. With a view to protecting the rights of aliens carrying on lawful paid activities in the country in which they are present, such rights may be specified by the Governments concerned in multilateral or bilateral conventions.

Article 9

No alien shall be arbitrarily deprived of his or her lawfully acquired assets.

Article 10

Any alien shall be free at any time to communicate with the consulate or diplomatic mission of the State of which he or she is a national or, in the absence thereof, with the consulate or diplomatic mission of any other State entrusted with the protection of the interests of the State of which he or she is a national in the State where he or she resides.

12. International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families

Adopted by General Assembly resolution 45/158 of 18 December 1990 (not in force)

PREAMBLE

The States Parties to the present Convention,

Taking into account the principles embodied in the basic instruments of the United Nations concerning human rights, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women and the Convention on the Rights of the Child,

Taking into account also the principles and standards set forth in the relevant instruments elaborated within the framework of the International Labour Organisation, especially the Convention concerning Migration for Employment (N° 97), the Convention concerning Migrations in Abusive Conditions and the Promotion of Equality of Opportunity and Treatment of Migrant Workers (N° 143), the Recommendation concerning Migration for Employment (N° 86), the Recommendation concerning Migrant Workers (N° 151), the Convention concerning Forced or Compulsory Labour (N° 29) and the Convention concerning Abolition of Forced Labour (N° 105),

Reaffirming the importance of the principles contained in the Convention against Discrimination in Education of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization,

Recalling the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the Declaration of the Fourth United Nations Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, the Code of Conduct for Law Enforcement Officials, and the Slavery Conventions,

Recalling that one of the objectives of the International Labour Organisation, as stated in its Constitution, is the protection of the interests of workers when employed in countries other than their own, and bearing in mind the expertise and experience of that organization in matters related to migrant workers and members of their families,

Recognizing the importance of the work done in connection with migrant workers and members of their families in various organs of the United Nations, in particular in the Commission on Human Rights and the Commission for Social Development, and in the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization, as well as in other international organizations,

Recognizing also the progress made by certain States on a regional or bilateral basis towards the protection of the rights of migrant workers and members of their families, as well as the importance and usefulness of bilateral and multilateral agreements in this field,

Realizing the importance and extent of the migration phenomenon, which involves millions of people and affects a large number of States in the international community,

Aware of the impact of the flows of migrant workers on States and people concerned, and desiring to establish norms which may contribute to the harmonization of the attitudes of States through the acceptance of basic principles concerning the treatment of migrant workers and members of their families,

Considering the situation of vulnerability in which migrant workers and members of their families frequently find themselves owing, among other things, to their absence from their State of origin and to the difficulties they may encounter arising from their presence in the State of employment,

Convinced that the rights of migrant workers and members of their families have not been sufficiently recognized everywhere and therefore require appropriate international protection,

Taking into account the fact that migration is often the cause of serious problems for the members of the families of migrant workers as well as for the workers themselves, in particular because of the scattering of the family,

Bearing in mind that the human problems involved in migration are even more serious in the case of irregular migration and convinced therefore that appropriate action should be encouraged in order to prevent and eliminate clandestine movements and trafficking in migrant workers, while at the same time assuring the protection of their fundamental human rights,

Considering that workers who are non-documented or in an irregular situation are frequently employed under less favourable conditions of work than other workers and that certain employers find this an inducement to seek such labour in order to reap the benefits of unfair competition,

Considering also that recourse to the employment of migrant workers who are in an irregular situation will be discouraged if the fundamental human rights of all migrant workers are more widely recognized and, moreover, that granting certain additional rights to migrant workers and members of their families in a regular situation will encourage all migrants and employers to respect and comply with the laws and procedures established by the States concerned.

Convinced, therefore, of the need to bring about the international protection of the rights of all migrant workers and members of their families, reaffirming and establishing basic norms in a comprehensive convention which could be applied universally,

Have agreed as follows:

7. No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be liable to be tried or punished again for an offence for which he or she has already been finally convicted or acquitted in accordance with the law and penal procedure of the State concerned.

Article 19

1. No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be held guilty of any criminal offence on account of any act or omission that did not constitute a criminal offence under national or international law at the time when the criminal offence was committed, nor shall a heavier penalty be imposed than the one that was applicable at the time when it was committed. If, subsequent to the commission of the offence, provision is made by law for the imposition of a lighter penalty, he or she shall benefit thereby.

2. Humanitarian considerations related to the status of a migrant worker, in particular with respect to his or her right of residence or work, should be taken into account in imposing a sentence for a criminal offence committed by a migrant worker or a member of his or her family.

Article 20

1. No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be imprisoned merely on the ground of failure to fulfil a contractual obligation.

2. No migrant worker or member of his or her family shall be deprived of his or her authorization of residence or work permit or expelled merely on the ground of failure to fulfil an obligation arising out of a work contract unless fulfilment of that obligation constitutes a condition for such authorization or permit.

The persons concerned shall be informed of these rights before or at the latest at the time the decision is rendered.
4. Except where a final decision is pronounced by a judicial authority, the person concerned shall have the right to submit the reason he or she should not be expelled and to have his or her case reviewed by the competent authority, unless compelling reasons of national security require otherwise. Pending such review, the person concerned shall have the right to seek a stay of the decision of expulsion.
5. If a decision of expulsion that has already been executed is subsequently annulled, the person concerned shall have the right to seek compensation according to law and the earlier decision shall not be used to prevent him or her from re-entering the State concerned.
6. In case of expulsion, the person concerned shall have a reasonable opportunity before or after departure to settle any claims for wages and other entitlements due to him or her and any pending liabilities.
7. Without prejudice to the execution of a decision of expulsion, a migrant worker or a member of his or her family who is subject to such a decision may seek entry into a State other than his or her State of origin.

9. Expulsion from the State of employment shall not in itself prejudice any rights of a migrant worker or a member of his or her family acquired in accordance with the law of that State, including the right to receive wages and other entitlements due to him or her.

Article 23

Migrant workers and members of their families shall have the right to have recourse to the protection and assistance of the consular or diplomatic authorities of their State of origin or of a State representing the interests of that State whenever the rights recognized in the present Convention are impaired. In particular, in case of expulsion, the person concerned shall be informed of this right without delay and the authorities of the expelling State shall facilitate the exercise of such right.

Article 24

Every migrant worker and every member of his or her family shall have the right to recognition everywhere as a person before the law.

Article 25

1. Migrant workers shall enjoy treatment not less favourable than that which applies to nationals of the State of employment in respect of remuneration and:

(a) Other conditions of work, that is to say, overtime, hours of work, weekly rest, holidays with pay, safety, health, termination of the employment relationship and any other conditions of work which, according to national law and practice, are covered by these terms;

(b) Other terms of employment, that is to say, minimum age of employment, restriction on home work and any other matters which, according to national law and practice, are considered a term of employment.

It shall not be prolonged beyond the period which is strictly necessary for this purpose. All instances of physical restraint or involuntary seclusion, the reasons for them and their nature and extent shall be recorded in the patient's medical record. A patient who is restrained or secluded shall be kept under humane conditions and be under the care and close and regular supervision of qualified members of the staff. A personal representative, if any and if relevant, shall be given prompt notice of any physical restraint or involuntary seclusion of the patient.

12. Sterilization shall never be carried out as a treatment for mental illness.

13. A major medical or surgical procedure may be carried out on a person with mental illness only where it is permitted by domestic law, where it is considered that it would best serve the health needs of the patient and where the patient gives informed consent, except that, where the patient is unable to give informed consent, the procedure shall be authorized only after independent review.

14. Psychosurgery and other intrusive and irreversible treatments for mental illness shall never be carried out on a patient who is an involuntary patient in a mental health facility and, to the extent that domestic law permits them to be carried out, they may be carried out on any other patient only where the patient has given informed consent and an independent external body has satisfied itself that there is genuine informed consent and that the treatment best serves the health needs of the patient.

15. Clinical trials and experimental treatment shall never be carried out on any patient without informed consent, except that a patient who is unable to give informed consent may be admitted to a clinical trial or given experimental treatment, but only with the approval of a competent, independent review body specifically constituted for this purpose.

16. In the cases specified in paragraphs 6, 7, 8, 13, 14 and 15 above, the patient or his or her personal representative, or any interested person, shall have the right to appeal to a judicial or other independent authority concerning any treatment given to him or her.

Principle 12

Notice of rights

1. A patient in a mental health facility shall be informed as soon as possible after admission, in a form and a language which the patient understands, of all his or her rights in accordance with these Principles and under domestic law, which information shall include an explanation of those rights and how to exercise them.

2. If and for so long as a patient is unable to understand such information, the rights of the patient shall be communicated to the personal representative, if any and if appropriate, and to the person or persons best able to represent the patient's interests and willing to do so.

3. A patient who has the necessary capacity has the right to nominate a person who should be informed on his or her behalf, as well as a person to represent his or her interests to the authorities of the facility.

Principle 13

Rights and conditions in mental health facilities

1. Every patient in a mental health facility shall, in particular, have the right to full respect for his or her:

(a) Recognition everywhere as a person before the law;

(b) Privacy;

(c) Freedom of communication, which includes freedom to communicate with other persons in the facility; freedom to send and receive uncensored private communications; freedom to receive, in private, visits from a counsel or personal representative and, at all reasonable times, from other visitors; and freedom of access to postal and telephone services and to newspapers, radio and television;

(d) Freedom of religion or belief.

2. The environment and living conditions in mental health facilities shall be as close as possible to those of the normal life of persons of similar age and in particular shall include:

(a) Facilities for recreational and leisure activities;

(b) Facilities for education;

(c) Facilities to purchase or receive items for daily living, recreation and communication;

(d) Facilities, and encouragement to use such facilities, for a patient's engagement in active occupation suited to his or her social and cultural background, and for appropriate vocational rehabilitation measures to promote reintegration in the community. These measures should include vocational guidance, vocational training and placement services to enable patients to secure or retain employment in the community.

3. In no circumstances shall a patient be subject to forced labour. Within the limits compatible with the needs of the patient and with the requirements of institutional administration, a patient shall be able to choose the type of work he or she wishes to perform.

4. The labour of a patient in a mental health facility shall not be exploited. Every such patient shall have the right to receive the same remuneration for any work which he or she does as would, according to domestic law or custom, be paid for such work to a non-patient. Every such patient shall, in any event, have the right to receive a fair share of any remuneration which is paid to the mental health facility for his or her work.

Principle 14

Resources for mental health facilities

1. A mental health facility shall have access to the same level of resources as any other health establishment, and in particular:

(a) Qualified medical and other appropriate professional staff in sufficient numbers and with adequate space to provide each patient with privacy and a programme of appropriate and active therapy;

(b) Diagnostic and therapeutic equipment for the patient;

(c) Appropriate professional care; and

(d) Adequate, regular and comprehensive treatment, including supplies of medication.

2. Every mental health facility shall be inspected by the competent authorities with sufficient frequency to ensure that the conditions, treatment and care of patients comply with these Principles.

Principle 15

Admission principles

1. Where a person needs treatment in a mental health facility, every effort shall be made to avoid involuntary admission.

2. Access to a mental health facility shall be administered in the same way as access to any other facility for any other illness.

3. Every patient not admitted involuntarily shall have the right to leave the mental health facility at any time unless the criteria for his or her retention as an involuntary patient, as set forth in Principle 16, apply, and he or she shall be informed of that right.

Principle 16

Involuntary admission

1. A person may (a) be admitted involuntarily to a mental health facility as a patient; or (b) having already been admitted voluntarily as a patient, be retained as an involuntary patient in the mental health facility if, and only if, a qualified mental health practitioner authorized by law for that purpose determines, in accordance with Principle 4, that that person has a mental illness and considers:

(a) That, because of that mental illness, there is a serious likelihood of immediate or imminent harm to that person or to other persons; or

(b) That, in the case of a person whose mental illness is severe and whose judgement is impaired, failure to admit or retain that person is likely to lead to a serious deterioration in his or her condition or will prevent the giving of appropriate treatment that can only be given by admission to a mental health facility in accordance with the principle of the least restrictive alternative.

In the case referred to in subparagraph (b), a second such mental health practitioner, independent of the first, should be consulted where possible. If such consultation takes place, the involuntary admission or retention may not take place unless the second mental health practitioner concurs.

2. Involuntary admission or retention shall initially be for a short period as specified by domestic law for observation and preliminary treatment pending review of the admission or retention by the review body. The grounds of the admission shall be communicated to the patient without delay and the fact of the admission and the grounds for it shall also be communicated promptly and in detail to the review body, to the patient's personal representative, if any, and, unless the patient objects, to the patient's family.

3. A mental health facility may receive involuntarily admitted patients only if the facility has been designated to do so by a competent authority prescribed by domestic law.

Principle 17

Review body

1. The review body shall be a judicial or other independent and impartial body established by domestic law and functioning in accordance with procedures laid down by domestic law. It shall, in formulating its decisions have the assistance of one or more qualified and independent mental health practitioners and take their advice into account.

2. The review body's initial review, as required by paragraph 2 of Principle 16, of a decision to admit or retain a person as an involuntary patient shall take place as soon as possible after that decision and shall be conducted in accordance with simple and expeditious procedures as specified by domestic law.

3. The review body shall periodically review the cases of involuntary patients at reasonable intervals as specified by domestic law.
4. An involuntary patient may apply to the review body for release or voluntary status, at reasonable intervals as specified by domestic law.
5. At each review, the review body shall consider whether the criteria for involuntary admission set out in paragraph 1 of Principle 16 are still satisfied, and, if not, the patient shall be discharged as an involuntary patient.
6. If at any time the mental health practitioner responsible for the case is satisfied that the conditions for the retention of a person as an involuntary patient are no longer satisfied, he or she shall order the discharge of that person as such a patient.
7. A patient or his personal representative or any interested person shall have the right to appeal to a higher court against a decision that the patient be admitted to, or be retained in, a mental health facility.

Principle 18

Procedural safeguards

1. The patient shall be entitled to choose and appoint a counsel to represent the patient as such, including representation in any complaint procedure or appeal. If the patient does not secure such services, a counsel shall be made available without payment by the patient to the extent that the patient lacks sufficient means to pay.
2. The patient shall also be entitled to the assistance, if necessary, of the services of an interpreter. Where such services are necessary and the patient does not secure them, they shall be made available without payment by the patient to the extent that the patient lacks sufficient means to pay.
3. The patient and the patient's counsel may request and produce at any hearing an independent mental health report and any other reports and oral, written and other evidence that are relevant and admissible.
4. Copies of the patient's records and any reports and documents to be submitted shall be given to the patient and to the patient's counsel, except in special cases where it is determined that a specific disclosure to the patient would cause serious harm to the patient's health or put at risk the safety of others. As domestic law may provide, any document not given to the patient should, when this can be done in confidence, be given to the patient's personal representative and counsel. When any part of a document is withheld from a patient, the patient or the patient's counsel, if any, shall receive notice of the withholding and the reasons for it and shall be subject to judicial review.

5. The patient and the patient's personal representative and counsel shall be entitled to attend, participate and be heard personally in any hearing.

6. If the patient or the patient's personal representative or counsel requests that a particular person be present at a hearing, that person shall be admitted unless it is determined that the person's presence could cause serious harm to the patient's health or put at risk the safety of others.

7. Any decision whether the hearing or any part of it shall be in public or in private and may be publicly reported shall give full consideration to the patient's own wishes, to the need to respect the privacy of the patient and of other persons and to the need to prevent serious harm to the patient's health or to avoid putting at risk the safety of others.

8. The decision arising out of the hearing and the reasons for it shall be expressed in writing. Copies shall be given to the patient and his or her personal representative and counsel. In deciding whether the decision shall be published in whole or in part, full consideration shall be given to the patient's own wishes, to the need to respect his or her privacy and that of other persons, to the public interest in the open administration of justice and to the need to prevent serious harm to the patient's health or to avoid putting at risk the safety of others.

Access to information

1. A patient (which term in this Principle includes a former patient) shall be entitled to have access to the information concerning the patient in his or her health and personal records maintained by a mental health facility. This right may be subject to restrictions in order to prevent serious harm to the patient's health and avoid putting at risk the safety of others. As domestic law may provide, any such information not given to the patient should, when this can be done in confidence, be given to the patient's personal representative and counsel. When any of the information is withheld from a patient, the patient or the patient's counsel, if any, shall receive notice of the withholding and the reasons for it and it shall be subject to judicial review.

2. Any written comments by the patient or the patient's personal representative or counsel shall, on request, be inserted in the patient's file.

Principle 20

Criminal offenders

1. This Principle applies to persons serving sentences of imprisonment for criminal offences, or who are otherwise detained in the course of criminal proceedings or investigations against them, and who are determined to have a mental illness or who it is believed may have such an illness.

2. All such persons should receive the best available mental health care as provided in Principle 1. These Principles shall apply to them to the fullest extent possible, with only such limited modifications and exceptions as are necessary in the circumstances. No such modifications and exceptions shall prejudice the persons' rights under the instruments noted in paragraph 5 of Principle 1.

3. Domestic law may authorize a court or other competent authority, acting on the basis of competent and independent medical advice, to order that such persons be admitted to a mental health facility.

4. Treatment of persons determined to have a mental illness shall in all circumstances be consistent with Principle 11.

Principle 21

Complaints

Every patient and former patient shall have the right to make a complaint through procedures as specified by domestic law.

Principle 22

Monitoring and remedies

States shall ensure that appropriate mechanisms are in force to promote compliance with these Principles, for the inspection of mental health facilities, for the submission, investigation and resolution of complaints and for the institution of appropriate disciplinary or judicial proceedings for professional misconduct or violation of the rights of a patient.

Principle 23

Implementation

1. States should implement these Principles through appropriate legislative, judicial, administrative, educational and other measures, which they shall review periodically.

2. States shall make these Principles widely known by appropriate and active means.

Principle 24

Scope of principles relating to mental health facilities

These Principles apply to all persons who are admitted to a mental health facility.

Principle 25

Saving of existing rights

There shall be no restriction upon or derogation from any existing rights of patients, including rights recognized in applicable international or domestic law, on the pretext that these Principles do not recognize such rights or that they recognize them to a lesser extent.

3. Convention (N° 169) concerning Indigenous and Tribal Peoples in Independent Countries

Adopted on 27 June 1989 by the General Conference of the International Labour Organisation at its seventy-sixth session

ENTRY INTO FORCE: 5 September 1991

The General Conference of the International Labour Organisation,

Having been convened at Geneva by the Governing Body of the International Labour Office, and having met in its seventy-sixth session on 7 June 1989, and

Noting the international standards contained in the Indigenous and Tribal Populations Convention and Recommendation, 1957, and

Recalling the terms of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the many international instruments on the prevention of discrimination, and

Considering that the developments which have taken place in international law since 1957, as well as developments in the situation of indigenous and tribal peoples in all regions of the world, have made it appropriate to adopt new international standards on the subject with a view to removing the assimilationist orientation of the earlier standards, and

Recognising the aspirations of these peoples to exercise control over their own institutions, ways of life and economic development and to maintain and develop their identities, languages and religions, within the framework of the States in which they live, and

Noting that in many parts of the world these peoples are unable to enjoy their fundamental human rights to the same degree as the rest of the population of the States within which they live, and that their laws, values, customs and perspectives have often been eroded, and

Calling attention to the distinctive contributions of indigenous and tribal peoples to the cultural diversity and social and ecological harmony of humankind and to international co-operation and understanding, and

Noting that the following provisions have been framed with the co-operation of the United Nations, the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization, as well as of the Inter-American Indian Institute, at appropriate levels and in their respective fields, and that it is proposed to continue this co-operation in promoting and securing the application of these provisions, and

Having decided upon the adoption of certain proposals with regard to the partial revision of the Indigenous and Tribal Populations Convention, 1957 (No. 107), which is the fourth item on the agenda of the session, and

Having determined that these proposals shall take the form of an international Convention revising the Indigenous and Tribal Populations Convention, 1957;

Adopts this twenty-seventh day of June of the year one thousand nine hundred and eighty-nine the following Convention, which may be cited as the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989;

PART I. GENERAL POLICY

Article 1

1. This Convention applies to:

(a) Tribal peoples in independent countries whose social, cultural and economic conditions distinguish them from other sections of the national community, and whose status is regulated wholly or partially by their own customs or traditions or by special laws or regulations;

(b) Peoples in independent countries who are regarded as indigenous on account of their descent from the populations which inhabited the country, or a geographical region to which the country belongs, at the time of conquest or colonisation or the establishment of present State boundaries and who, irrespective of their legal status, retain some or all of their own social, economic, cultural and political institutions.

2. Self-identification as indigenous or tribal shall be regarded as a fundamental criterion for determining the groups to which the provisions of this Convention apply.

3. The use of the term «peoples» in this Convention shall not be construed as having any implications as regards the rights which may attach to the term under international law.

Article 2

1. Governments shall have the responsibility for developing, with the participation of the peoples concerned, co-ordinated and systematic action to protect the rights of these peoples and to guarantee respect for their integrity.

2. Such action shall include measures for:

(a) Ensuring that members of these peoples benefit on an equal footing from the rights and opportunities which national laws and regulations grant to other members of the population;

(b) Promoting the full realisation of the social, economic and cultural rights of these peoples with respect for their social and cultural identity, their customs and traditions and their institutions:

(c) Assisting the members of the peoples concerned to eliminate socio-economic gaps that may exist between indigenous and other members of the national community, in a manner compatible with their aspirations and ways of life.

Article 3

1. Indigenous and tribal peoples shall enjoy the full measure of human rights and fundamental freedoms without hindrance or discrimination. The provisions of the Convention shall be applied without discrimination to male and female members of these peoples.

2. No form of force or coercion shall be used in violation of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of the peoples concerned, including the rights contained in this Convention.

Article 4

duties, the Chairman of the Commission shall notify the Director-General and shall thereupon declare the seat of such member to be vacant.

3. The Director-General shall inform the Member States of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, and any States not members of the Organization which have become Parties to this Protocol under the provisions of article 23, of any vacancies which have occurred in accordance with paragraphs 1 and 2 of this article.

1. If a State Party to this Protocol considers that another State Party is not giving effect to a provision of the Convention, it may, by written communication, bring the matter to the attention of that State. Within three months after the receipt of the communication, the receiving State shall afford the complaining State an explanation or statement in writing concerning the matter, which should include, to the extent possible and pertinent, references to procedures and remedies taken, or pending, or available in the matter.

2. If the matter is not adjusted to the satisfaction of both parties, either by bilateral negotiations or by any other procedure open to them, within six months after the receipt by the receiving State of the initial communication, either State shall have the right to refer the matter to the Commission, by notice given to the Director-General and to the other State.

3. The provisions of the preceding paragraphs shall not affect the rights of States Parties to have recourse, in accordance with general or special international agreements in force between them, to other procedures for settling disputes including that of referring disputes by mutual consent to the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague.

Article 13

From the beginning of the sixth year after the entry into force of this Protocol, the Commission may also be made responsible for seeking the settlement of any dispute concerning the application or interpretation of the Convention arising between States which are Parties to the Convention but are not, or are not all, Parties to this Protocol, if the said States agree to submit such dispute to the Commission. The conditions to be fulfilled by the said States in reaching agreement shall be laid down by the Commission's Rules of Procedure.

3. Declaration on Race and Racial Prejudice

Adopted and proclaimed by the General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization at its twentieth session, on 27 November 1978

PREAMBLE

The General Conference of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, meeting at Paris at its twentieth session, from 24 October to 28 November 1978,

Whereas it is stated in the Preamble to the Constitution of UNESCO, adopted on 16 November 1945, that "the great and terrible war which has now ended was a war made possible by the denial of the democratic principles of the dignity, equality and mutual respect of men, and by the propagation, in their place, through ignorance and prejudice, of the doctrine of the inequality of men and races", and whereas, according to Article 1 of the said Constitution, the purpose of UNESCO "is to contribute to peace and security by promoting collaboration among the nations through education, science and culture in order to further universal respect for justice, for the rule of law and for the human rights and fundamental freedoms which are affirmed for the peoples of the world, without distinction of race, sex, language or religion, by the Charter of the United Nations",

Recognizing that, more than three decades after the founding of UNESCO, these principles are just as significant as they were when they were embodied in its Constitution,

Mindful of the process of decolonization and other historical changes which have led most of the peoples formerly under foreign rule to recover their sovereignty, making the international community a universal and diversified whole and creating new opportunities of eradicating the scourge of racism and of putting an end to its odious manifestations in all aspects of social and political life, both nationally and internationally,

Convinced that the essential unity of the human race and consequently the fundamental equality of all human beings and all peoples, recognized in the loftiest expressions of philosophy, morality and religion, reflect an ideal towards which ethics and science are converging today,

Convinced that all peoples and all human groups, whatever their composition or ethnic origin, contribute according to their own genius to the progress of the civilizations and cultures which, in their plurality and as a result of their interpenetration, constitute the common heritage of mankind,

Confirming its attachment to the principles proclaimed in the United Nations Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and its determination to promote the implementation of the International Covenants on Human Rights as well as the Declaration on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, Determined also to promote the implementation of the United Nations Declaration and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination,

Noting the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, the International Convention on the Suppression and Punishment of the Crime of Apartheid and the Convention on the Non-Applicability of Statutory Limitations to War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity,

Recalling also the international instruments already adopted by UNESCO, including in particular the Convention and Recommendation against Discrimination in Education, the Recommendation concerning the Status of Teachers, the Declaration of the Principles of International Cultural Co-operation, the Recommendation concerning Education for International Understanding, Co-operation and Peace and Education relating to Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, the Recommendations on the Status of Scientific Researchers, and the Recommendation on participation by the people at large in cultural life and their contribution to it,

Bearing in mind the four statements on the race question adopted by experts convened by UNESCO,

Reaffirming its desire to play a vigorous and constructive part in the implementation of the programme of the Decade for Action to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, as defined by the General Assembly of the United Nations at its twenty-eighth session,

Noting with the gravest concern that racism, racial discrimination, colonialism and apartheid continue to afflict the world in ever-changing forms, as a result both of the continuation of legislative provisions and government and administrative practices contrary to the principles of human rights and also of the continued existence of political and social structures, and of relationships and attitudes, characterized by injustice and contempt for human beings and leading to the exclusion, humiliation and exploitation, or to the forced assimilation, of the members of disadvantaged groups,

Expressing its indignation at these offences against human dignity, deploring the obstacles they place in the way of mutual understanding between peoples and alarmed at the danger of their seriously disturbing international peace and security,

Adopts and solemnly proclaims this Declaration on Race and Racial Prejudice:

1. All human beings belong to a single species and are descended from a common stock. They are born equal in dignity and rights and all form an integral part of humanity.
2. All individuals and groups have the right to be different, to consider themselves as different and to be regarded as such. However, the diversity of life styles and the right to be different may not, in any circumstances, serve as a pretext for racial prejudice; they may not justify either in law or in fact any discriminatory practice whatsoever, nor provide a ground for the policy of apartheid, which is the extreme form of racism.
3. Identity of origin in no way affects the fact that human beings can and may live differently, nor does it preclude the existence of differences based on cultural, environmental and historical diversity nor the right to maintain cultural identity.
4. All peoples of the world possess equal faculties for attaining the highest level in intellectual, technical, social, economic, cultural and political development.
5. The differences between the achievements of the different peoples are entirely attributable to geographical, historical, political, economic, social and cultural factors. Such differences can in no case serve as a pretext for any rank-ordered classification of nations or peoples.

1. Any theory which involves the claim that racial or ethnic groups are inherently superior or inferior, thus implying that some would be entitled to dominate or eliminate others, presumed to be inferior, or which bases value judgements on racial differentiation, has no scientific foundation and is contrary to the moral and ethical principles of humanity.
2. Racism includes racist ideologies, prejudiced attitudes, discriminatory behaviour, structural arrangements and institutionalized practices resulting in racial inequality as well as the fallacious notion that discriminatory relations between groups are morally and scientifically justifiable; it is reflected in discriminatory provisions in legislation or regulations and discriminatory practices as well as in anti-social beliefs and acts; it hinders the development of its victims, perverts those who practise it, divides nations internally, impedes international co-operation and gives rise to political tensions between peoples; it is contrary to the fundamental principles of international law and, consequently, seriously disturbs international peace and security.
3. Racial prejudice, historically linked with inequalities in power, reinforced by economic and social differences between individuals and groups, and still seeking today to justify such inequalities, is totally without justification.

Article 3

Any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on race, colour, ethnic or national origin or religious intolerance motivated by racist considerations, which destroys or compromises the sovereign equality of States and the right of peoples to self-determination, or which limits in an arbitrary or discriminatory manner the right of every human being and group to full development is incompatible with the requirements of an international order which is just and guarantees respect for human rights; the right to full development implies equal access to the means of personal and collective advancement and fulfilment in a climate of respect for the values of civilizations and cultures, both national and world-wide.

Article 4

1. Any restriction on the complete self-fulfilment of human beings and free communication between them which is based on racial or ethnic considerations is contrary to the principle of equality in dignity and rights; it cannot be admitted.
2. One of the most serious violations of this principle is represented by apartheid, which, like genocide, is a crime against humanity, and gravely disturbs international peace and security.
3. Other policies and practices of racial segregation and discrimination constitute crimes against the conscience and dignity of mankind and may lead to political tensions and gravely endanger international peace and security.

1. Culture, as a product of all human beings and a common heritage of mankind, and education in its broadest sense, offer men and women increasingly effective means of adaptation, enabling them not only to affirm that they are born equal in dignity and rights, but also to recognize that they should respect the right of all groups to their own cultural identity and the development of their distinctive cultural life within the national and international contexts, it being understood that it rests with each group to decide in complete freedom on the maintenance, and, if appropriate, the adaptation or enrichment of the values which it regards as essential to its identity.
2. States, in accordance with their constitutional principles and procedures, as well as all other competent authorities and the entire teaching profession, have a responsibility to see that the educational resources of all countries are used to combat racism, more especially by ensuring that curricula and textbooks include scientific and ethical considerations concerning human unity and diversity and that no invidious distinctions are made with regard to any people; by training teachers to achieve these ends; by making the resources of the educational system available to all groups of the population without racial restriction or discrimination; and by taking appropriate steps to remedy the handicaps from which certain racial or ethnic groups suffer with regard to their level of education and standard of living and in particular to prevent such handicaps from being passed on to children.

3. The mass media and those who control or serve them, as well as all organized groups within national communities, are urged - with due regard to the principles embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, particularly the principle of freedom of expression - to promote understanding, tolerance and friendship among individuals and groups and to contribute to the eradication of racism, racial discrimination and racial prejudice, in particular by refraining from presenting a stereotyped, partial, unilateral or tendentious picture of individuals and of various human groups. Communication between racial and ethnic groups must be a reciprocal process, enabling them to express themselves and to be fully heard without let or hindrance. The mass media should therefore be freely receptive to ideas of individuals and groups which facilitate such communication.

1. The State has prime responsibility for ensuring human rights and fundamental freedoms on an entirely equal footing in dignity and rights for all individuals and all groups.

2. So far as its competence extends and in accordance with its constitutional principles and procedures, the State should take all appropriate steps, inter alia by legislation, particularly in the spheres of education, culture and communication, to prevent, prohibit and eradicate racism, racist propaganda, racial segregation and apartheid and to encourage the dissemination of knowledge and the findings of appropriate research in natural and social sciences on the causes and prevention of racial prejudice and racist attitudes, with due regard to the principles embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

3. Since laws proscribing racial discrimination are not in themselves sufficient, it is also incumbent on States to supplement them by administrative machinery for the systematic investigation of instances of racial discrimination, by a comprehensive framework of legal remedies against acts of racial discrimination, by broadly based education and research programmes designed to combat racial prejudice and racial discrimination and by programmes of positive political, social, educational and cultural measures calculated to promote genuine mutual respect among groups. Where circumstances warrant, special programmes should be undertaken to promote the advancement of disadvantaged groups and, in the case of nationals, to ensure their effective participation in the decision-making processes of the community.

Article 7

In addition to political, economic and social measures, law is one of the principal means of ensuring equality in dignity and rights among individuals, and of curbing any propaganda, any form of organization or any practice which is based on ideas or theories referring to the alleged superiority of racial or ethnic groups or which seeks to justify or encourage racial hatred and discrimination in any form. States should adopt such legislation as is appropriate to this end and see that it is given effect and applied by all their services, with due regard to the principles embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Such legislation should form part of a political, economic and social framework conducive to its implementation. Individuals and other legal entities, both public and private, must conform with such legislation and use all appropriate means to help the population as a whole to understand and apply it.

Article 8

1. Individuals, being entitled to an economic, social, cultural and legal order, on the national and international planes, such as to allow them to exercise all their capabilities on a basis of entire equality of rights and opportunities, have corresponding duties towards their fellows, towards the society in which they live and towards the international community. They are accordingly under an obligation to promote harmony among the peoples, to combat racism and racial prejudice and to assist by every means available to them in eradicating racial discrimination in all its forms.

2. In the field of racial prejudice and racist attitudes and practices, specialists in natural and social sciences and cultural studies, as well as scientific organizations and associations, are called upon to undertake objective research on a wide interdisciplinary basis; all States should encourage them to this end.

3. It is, in particular, incumbent upon such specialists to ensure, by all means available to them, that their research findings are not misinterpreted, and also that they assist the public in understanding such findings.

Article 9

1. The principle of the equality in dignity and rights of all human beings and all peoples, irrespective of race, colour and origin, is a generally accepted and recognized principle of international law. Consequently any form of racial discrimination practised by a State constitutes a violation of international law giving rise to its international responsibility.

2. Special measures must be taken to ensure equality in dignity and rights for individuals and groups wherever necessary, while ensuring that they are not such as to appear racially discriminatory. In this respect, particular attention should be paid to racial or ethnic groups which are socially or economically disadvantaged, so as to afford them, on a completely equal footing and without discrimination or restriction, the protection of the laws and regulations and the advantages of the social measures in force, in particular in regard to housing, employment and health; to respect the authenticity of their culture and values; and to facilitate their social and occupational advancement, especially through education.

3. Population groups of foreign origin, particularly migrant workers and their families who contribute to the development of the host country, should benefit from appropriate measures designed to afford them security and respect for their dignity and cultural values and to facilitate their adaptation to the host environment and their professional advancement with a view to their subsequent reintegration in their country of origin and their contribution to its development; steps should be taken to make it possible for their children to be taught their mother tongue.

4. Existing disequilibria in international economic relations contribute to the exacerbation of racism and racial prejudice; all States should consequently endeavour to contribute to the restructuring of the international economy on a more equitable basis.

Article 10

International organizations, whether universal or regional, governmental or non-governmental, are called upon to co-operate and assist, so far as their respective fields of competence and means allow, in the full and complete implementation of the principles set out in this Declaration, thus contributing to the legitimate struggle of all men, born equal in dignity and rights, against the tyranny and oppression of racism, racial segregation, apartheid and genocide, so that all the peoples of the world may be forever delivered from these scourges.

Proclaims on this twenty-eighth day of November 1978 this Declaration on Fundamental Principles concerning the Contribution of the Mass Media to Strengthening Peace and International Understanding, to the Promotion of Human Rights and to Countering Racialism, Apartheid and Incitement to War.

Article I

The strengthening of peace and international understanding, the promotion of human rights and the countering of racialism, apartheid and incitement to war demand a free flow and a wider and better balanced dissemination of information. To this end, the mass media have a leading contribution to make. This contribution will be the more effective to the extent that the information reflects the different aspects of the subject dealt with.

Article II

1. The exercise of freedom of opinion, expression and information, recognized as an integral part of human rights and fundamental freedoms, is a vital factor in the strengthening of peace and international understanding.

2. Access by the public to information should be guaranteed by the diversity of the sources and means of information available to it, thus enabling each individual to check the accuracy of facts and to appraise events objectively. To this end, journalists must have freedom to report and the fullest possible facilities of access to information. Similarly, it is important that the mass media be responsive to concerns of peoples and individuals, thus promoting the participation of the public in the elaboration of information.

3. With a view to the strengthening of peace and international understanding, to promoting human rights and to countering racialism, apartheid and incitement to war, the mass media throughout the world, by reason of their role, contribute to promoting human rights, in particular by giving expression to oppressed peoples who struggle against colonialism, neo-colonialism, foreign occupation and all forms of racial discrimination and oppression and who are unable to make their voices heard within their own territories.

4. If the mass media are to be in a position to promote the principles of this Declaration in their activities, it is essential that journalists and other agents of the mass media, in their own country or abroad, be assured of protection guaranteeing them the best conditions for the exercise of their profession.

Article III

1. The mass media have an important contribution to make to the strengthening of peace and international understanding and in countering racialism, apartheid and incitement to war.

2. In countering aggressive war, racialism, apartheid and other violations of human rights which are inter alia spawned by prejudice and ignorance, the mass media, by disseminating information on the aims, aspirations, cultures and needs of all peoples, contribute to eliminate ignorance and misunderstanding between peoples, to make nationals of a country sensitive to the needs and desires of others, to ensure the respect of the rights and dignity of all nations, all peoples and all individuals without distinction of race, sex, language, religion or nationality and to draw attention to the great evils which afflict humanity, such as poverty, malnutrition and diseases, thereby promoting the formulation by States of the policies best able to promote the reduction of international tension and the peaceful and equitable settlement of international disputes.

Article IV

The mass media have an essential part to play in the education of young people in a spirit of peace, justice, freedom, mutual respect and understanding, in order to promote human rights, equality of rights as between all human beings and all nations, and economic and social progress. Equally, they have an important role to play in making known the views and aspirations of the younger generation.

Article V

In order to respect freedom of opinion, expression and information and in order that information may reflect all points of view, it is important that the points of view presented by those who consider that the information published or disseminated about them has seriously prejudiced their effort to strengthen peace and international understanding, to promote human rights or to counter racialism, apartheid and incitement to war be disseminated.

Article VI

For the establishment of a new equilibrium and greater reciprocity in the flow of information, which will be conducive to the institution of a just and lasting peace and to the economic and political independence of the developing countries, it is necessary to correct the inequalities in the flow of information to and from developing countries, and between those countries. To this end, it is essential that their mass media should have conditions and resources enabling them to gain strength and expand, and to co-operate both among themselves and with the mass media in developed countries.

Article VII

By disseminating more widely all of the information concerning the universally accepted objectives and principles which are the bases of the resolutions adopted by the different organs of the United Nations, the mass media contribute effectively to the strengthening of peace and international understanding, to the promotion of human rights, and to the establishment of a more just and equitable international economic order.

Article VIII

Professional organizations, and people who participate in the professional training of journalists and other agents of the mass media and who assist them in performing their functions in a responsible manner should attach special importance to the principles of this Declaration when drawing up and ensuring application of their codes of ethics.

Article IX

In the spirit of this Declaration, it is for the international community to contribute to the creation of the conditions for a free flow and wider and more balanced dissemination of information, and of the conditions for the protection, in the exercise of their functions, of journalists and other agents of the mass media. UNESCO is well placed to make a valuable contribution in this respect.

Article X

1. With due respect for constitutional provisions designed to guarantee freedom of information and for the applicable international instruments and agreements, it is indispensable to create and maintain throughout the world the conditions which make it possible for the organizations and persons professionally involved in the dissemination of information to achieve the objectives of this Declaration.
2. It is important that a free flow and wider and better balanced dissemination of information be encouraged.

3. To this end, it is necessary that States facilitate the procurement by the mass media in the developing countries of adequate conditions and resources enabling them to gain strength and expand, and that they support co-operation by the latter both among themselves and with the mass media in developed countries.

4. Similarly, on a basis of equality of rights, mutual advantage and respect for the diversity of the cultures which go to make up the common heritage of mankind, it is essential that bilateral and multilateral exchanges of information among all States, and in particular between those which have different economic and social systems, be encouraged and developed.

Article XI

For this declaration to be fully effective it is necessary, with due respect for the legislative and administrative provisions and the other obligations of Member States, to guarantee the existence of favourable conditions for the operation of the mass media, in conformity with the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and with the corresponding principles proclaimed in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations in 1966.

Adopt and solemnly proclaim this Declaration of Principles on Tolerance.

Resolving to take all positive measures necessary to promote tolerance in our societies, because tolerance is not only a cherished principle, but also a necessity for peace and for the economic and social advancement of all peoples.

We declare the following:

Article 1 - Meaning of tolerance

1.1 Tolerance is respect, acceptance and appreciation of the rich diversity of our world's cultures, our forms of expression and ways of being human. It is fostered by knowledge, openness, communication and freedom of thought, conscience and belief. Tolerance is harmony in difference. It is not only a moral duty, it is also a political and legal requirement. Tolerance, the virtue that makes peace possible, contributes to the replacement of the culture of war by a culture of peace.

1.2 Tolerance is not concession, condescension or indulgence. Tolerance is, above all, an active attitude prompted by recognition of the universal human rights and fundamental freedoms of others. In no circumstance can it be used to justify infringements of these fundamental values. Tolerance is to be exercised by individuals, groups and States.

1.3 Tolerance is the responsibility that upholds human rights, pluralism (including cultural pluralism), democracy and the rule of law. It involves the rejection of dogmatism and absolutism and affirms the standards set out in international human rights instruments.

1.4 Consistent with respect for human rights, the practice of tolerance does not mean toleration of social injustice or the abandonment or weakening of one's convictions. It means that one is free to adhere to one's own convictions and accepts that others adhere to theirs. It means accepting the fact that human beings, naturally diverse in their appearance, situation, speech, behaviour and values, have the right to live in peace and to be as they are. It also means that one's views are not to be imposed on others.

Article 2 - State level

2.1 Tolerance at the State level requires just and impartial legislation, law enforcement and judicial and administrative process. It also requires that economic and social opportunities be made available to each person without any discrimination. Exclusion and marginalization can lead to frustration, hostility and fanaticism.

2.2. In order to achieve a more tolerant society, States should ratify existing international human rights conventions, and draft new legislation where necessary to ensure equality of treatment and of opportunity for all groups and individuals in society.

2.3 It is essential for international harmony that individuals, communities and nations accept and respect the multicultural character of the human family. Without tolerance there can be no peace, and without peace there can be no development or democracy.

2.4 Intolerance may take the form of marginalization of vulnerable groups and their exclusion from social and political participation, as well as violence and discrimination against them. As confirmed in the Declaration on Race and Racial Prejudice, «All individuals and groups have the right to be different» (Article 1.2).

Article 3 - Social dimensions

3.1 In the modern world, tolerance is more essential than ever before. It is an age marked by the globalization of the economy and by rapidly increasing mobility, communication, integration and interdependence, large-scale migrations and displacement of populations, urbanization and changing social patterns. Since every part of the world is characterized by diversity, escalating intolerance and strife potentially menaces every region. It is not confined to any country, but is a global threat.

3.2 Tolerance is necessary between individuals and at the family and community levels. Tolerance promotion and the shaping of attitudes of openness, mutual listening and solidarity should take place in schools and universities, and through non-formal education, at home and in the workplace. The communication media are in a position to play a constructive role in facilitating free and open dialogue and discussion, disseminating the values of tolerance, and highlighting the dangers of indifference towards the rise in intolerant groups and ideologies.

3.3 As affirmed by the UNESCO Declaration on Race and Racial Prejudice, measures must be taken to ensure equality in dignity and rights for individuals and groups wherever necessary. In this respect, particular attention should be paid to vulnerable groups which are socially or economically disadvantaged so as to afford them the protection of the laws and social measures in force, in particular with regard to housing, employment and health, to respect the authenticity of their culture and values, and to facilitate their social and occupational advancement and integration, especially through education.

3.4 Appropriate scientific studies and networking should be undertaken to co-ordinate the international community's response to this global challenge, including analysis by the social sciences of root causes and effective countermeasures, as well as research and monitoring in support of policy-making and standard-setting action by Member States.

Article 4 - Education

4.1 Education is the most effective means of preventing intolerance. The first step in tolerance education is to teach people what their shared rights and freedoms are, so that they may be respected, and to promote the will to protect those of others.

4.2 Education for tolerance should be considered an urgent imperative; that is why it is necessary to promote systematic and rational tolerance teaching methods that will address the cultural, social, economic, political and religious sources of intolerance - major roots of violence and exclusion. Education policies and programmes should contribute to development of understanding, solidarity and tolerance among individuals as well as among ethnic, social, cultural, religious and linguistic groups and nations.

4.3 Education for tolerance should aim at countering influences that lead to fear and exclusion of others, and should help young people to develop capacities for independent judgement, critical thinking and ethical reasoning.

4.4 We pledge to support and implement programmes of social science research and education for tolerance, human rights and non-violence. This means devoting special attention to improving teacher training, curricula, the content of textbooks and lessons, and other educational materials including new educational technologies, with a view to educating caring and responsible citizens open to other cultures, able to appreciate the value of freedom, respectful of human dignity and differences, and able to prevent conflicts or resolve them by non-violent means.

Article 5 - Commitment to action

We commit ourselves to promoting tolerance and non-violence through programmes and institutions in the fields of education, science, culture and communication.

Article 6 - International Day for Tolerance

In order to generate public awareness, emphasize the dangers of intolerance and react with renewed commitment and action in support of tolerance promotion and education, we solemnly proclaim 16 November the annual International Day for Tolerance.
