

THE CISH SYMPOSIUM “Rethinking Humanities”

Call for papers by the International Center for Human Sciences (CISH) – Byblos

The symposium theme is “Rethinking Humanities for a post pandemic world”. The symposium will be held at the International Center for Human Sciences (CISH) – Byblos during 2020 - 2021. The accepted papers will be published online and in print, and will be discussed in different panels during the symposium.

Background

The coronavirus pandemic has shocked the current world order. For the first time after the world war two, humanity is confronting a common threat. It is time to revisit the human practices over years that lead to this urgency in terms of loss of life and loss of trust in Human kind. We normalized greed, inequity, exhaustion, impunity, manipulation; wars... Shall the world get back to normal, which was not really normal in terms of human and basic Rights?

The International Center for Human Sciences (CISH) is taking the challenge in exploring the current state and the needed changes to re-shock the world positively. As international Center for Human Sciences, CISH is engaging in shaping a better future for our humanity, as said Mahatma Ghandi “In a gentle way, you can shake the world”.

The CISH is calling for paper submissions to present your research in a wide variety of interdisciplinary and theoretical perspectives. Looking forward to papers, roundtables, and workshops that address our humanity issues, CISH is inviting for contributions exploring interdisciplinary areas related to human development including, but not limited to, the following broad areas and topics.
